dark, 1 dārk; 2 dârk. I. a. 1. Lacking light. 2. Of a deep shade; black, or approaching black. 3. Obscure; mysterious. 4. Gloomy; disheartening. 5. Unenlightened. 6. Atrocious; dastardly. 7. Of brunette complexion. 8. Blind; unknowing. II. n. Lack of light; a place, position, or state where there is little or no light; a shadow. [< AS. deorc.]

Syn.: black, dim, dismal, dusky, gloomy, murky, mysterious, obscure, opaque, sable, shadowy, shady, somber, swart, swarthy. Strictly, that which is black is absolutely destitute of color; that which is dark is absolutely destitute of light. In common speech, however, a coat is black, tho not optically colorless; the night is dark, tho the stars shine. That is obscure, shadowy, or shady from which the light is more or less cut off. Dusky is applied to objects which appear as if viewed in fading light; the word is often used, as are swart and swarthy, of the human skin when quite dark, or even verging toward black. Dim refers to imperfection of outline, from distance, darkness, mist, etc., or from some defect of vision. Opaque objects are impervious to light. Murky is said of that which is at once dark, obscure, and gloomy; as, a murky den; a murky sky. Figuratively, dark is emblematic of sadness, agreeing with somber, dismal, gloomy, also of moral evil; as, a dark deed. Of intellectual matters, dark is now rarely used in the old sense of a dark saying, etc. See MYSTERIOUS; OBSCURE.—Ant.: bright, brilliant, clear, crystalline, dazzling, gleaming, glowing, illumined, light, lucid, luminous, radiant, shining, transparent, white. Compare synonyms for LIGHT.

de-cay', 1 dı-kē'; 2 de-cā', v. I. t. To affect by decay; impair; rot. II. i. To suffer decay; deteriorate; decline; become rotten. [< L.[OF] decido, fall, < de, down, + cado, fall.]

Syn.: corrupt, decompose, molder, putrefy, rot, spoil. Rot is a strong word, ordinarily esteemed coarse, but on occasion capable of approved emphatic use; as, "the name of the wicked shall rot," Prov. x, 7.; decay and decompose are now common euphemisms. A substance is decomposed when resolved into its original elements by any process; it is decayed when resolved into its original elements by natural processes; it decays gradually, but may be instantly decomposed, as water into oxygen and hydrogen; to say that a thing is decayed may denote only a partial result, but to say it is decomposed ordinarily implies that the change is complete or nearly so. Putrefy and the adjectives putrid and putrescent, and the nouns putridity and putrescence, are used almost exclusively of animal matter in a state of decomposition, the more general word decay being used of either animal or vegetable substances. Decay may also be extended to any process of decline or breaking down, physical, mental, social, etc. See PUTREFY.

de-cep'tion, 1 dı-sep'shən; 2 de-çĕp'shon, n. 1. The act of deceiving; deceit; the state of being deceived. 2. Anything that deceives; a delusion.

Syn.: craft, cunning, deceit, deceitfulness, delusion, dissimulation, double-dealing, duplicity, fabrication, falsehood, finesse, fraud, guile, hypocrisy, imposition, lie, lying, prevarication, trickery, untruth. Deceit is especially applied to the habit, deception to the act; guile applies to the disposition out of which deceit and deception grow, and also to their actual practise. A lie, lying, or falsehood, is the uttering of what one knows to be false with intent to deceive. The novel or drama is not a lie, because not meant to deceive; the ancient teaching that the earth was flat was not a lie, because not then known to be false. Untruth is more than lack of accuracy, implying always lack of veracity; but it is a somewhat milder and more dignified word than lie. Falsehood and lying are in utterance; deceit and deception may be merely in act or implication. Deception may be innocent, and even unintentional, as in the case of an optical illusion; deceit always involves injurious intent. Craft and cunning have not necessarily any moral quality; they are common traits of animals, but stand rather low in the human scale. Duplicity is the habitual speaking or acting with intent to appear to mean what one does not. Dissimulation is rather a concealing of what is than a pretense of what is not. Finesse is simply an adroit and delicate management of a matter for one's own side, not necessarily involving deceit. Compare ARTIFICE; FICTION; FRAUD; HYPOCRISY; LIE.—Ant.: candor, fair dealing, frankness, guilelessness, honesty, openness, simplicity, sincerity, truth, veracity.

de-cep'tiv(eS, 1 dı-sep'tıv; 2 de-çĕp'tiv, a. Having power or tendency to deceive.

Syn.: deceitful, delusive, illusive, illusory. Persons are deceitful; things are deceptive. We speak of a deceitful, but not of a deceptive man. We speak, however, of deceitful promises, as involving personal intent to deceive. It is more accurate to say deceptive than deceitful appearances. See BAD; COUNTERFEIT.—Ant.: fair, frank, genuine, honest, open, real, truthful, veracious.

Syn.: befoul, contaminate, corrupt, infect, pollute, soil, spoil, stain, sully, taint, tarnish, vitiate. The hand may be defiled by a touch of pitch; swine that have been wallowing in the mud are befouled. Contaminate and infect refer to something evil that deeply pervades and permeates, as the human body or mind. Pollute is used chiefly of liquids; as, water polluted with sewage. Tainted meat is repulsive; infected meat contains germs of disease. A soiled garment may be cleansed by washing; a spoiled garment is beyond cleansing or repair. Bright metal is tarnished by exposure; a fair sheet is sullied by a dirty hand. In figurative use, defile may be used merely in the ceremonial sense; "they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled," John xviii, 28; contaminate refers to deep spiritual injury. Pollute has also a reference to sacrilege; as, to pollute a sanctuary, an altar, or an ordinance. The innocent are often contaminated by association with the wicked; the vicious are more and more corrupted by their own excesses. We speak of a vitiated taste or style; fraud vitiates a title or a contract. See ABUSE; CORRUPT; POLLUTE; VIOLATE.—Ant.: clean, cleanse, disinfect, hallow, purify, sanctify, wash.

—de-file′ment, n. The act of defiling, or state of being defiled; uncleanness; pollution.—de-fil′er, n.

def″i-ni′tion, 1 def″i-nish′an; 2 dĕf″i-nĭsh′on, n. 1. A description or explanation of a word or thing, by its attributes, properties, or relations, that distinguishes it from all other things. 2. The act of stating or showing what a word means, what a thing is, or what the content of a conception is; the act of defining. 3. The state of being definite; fixed shape; definitiveness. 4. The determining of the outline or limits of anything; the state of being clearly outlined or determined; in optics, the power of a lens to give a distinct image.

Syn.: comment, commentary, description, explanation, exposition, interpretation, rendering, translation. A definition is exact, an explanation general; a definition is formal, a description pictorial. A definition must include all that belongs to the object defined, and exclude all that does not; a description may include only some general features; an explanation may simply throw light upon some point of special difficulty. An exposition undertakes to state more fully what is compactly given or only implied in the text; as, an exposition of Scripture. Interpretation is ordinarily from one language into another, or from the language of one period into that of another; it may also be a statement giving the doubtful or hidden meaning of that which is recondite or perplexing; as, the interpretation of a dream, a riddle, or of some difficult passage. Definition, explanation, exposition, and interpretation are ordinarily blended in a commentary, which may also include description. A comment is upon a single passage; a commentary may be the same, but is usually understood to be a volume of comments.

to represent another or others or to transact business for them; a representative; deputy. [< L. de, from, + lego, send.]

Syn.: deputy, legate, proxy, representative, substitute. These words agree in designating one who acts in the place of some other or others. The legate is an ecclesiastical officer representing the Pope. In strict usage the deputy or delegate is more limited in functions and more closely bound by instructions than a representative. A single officer may have a deputy; many persons combine to choose a delegate or representative. In the United States informal assemblies send delegates to nominating conventions with no legislative authority; representatives are legally elected to Congress and the various legislatures, with lawmaking power.

—del″e-ga′tion, n. The act of delegating; a person or persons appointed to act for another or others; delegates collectively. del′e-ga-cy†.

de-li′cious, 1 dı-lish′us; 2 de-lĭsh′ŭs, a. Extremely pleasant or grateful; affording exquisite pleasure. [< L. deliciosus, pleasant, < delicio, charm.]

Syn.: dainty, delightful, exquisite, luscious, savory. That is delicious which affords a gratification at once vivid and delicate to the senses, especially to those of taste and smell; as, delicious fruit; a delicious odor; luscious has a kindred but more fulsome meaning, inclining toward a cloying excess of sweetness or richness. Savory is applied chiefly to cooked food made palatable by spices and condiments. Delightful may be applied to the higher gratifications of sense, as delightful music, but is chiefly used for that which is mental and spiritual Delicious has a limited use in this way; as, a delicious bit of poetry; the word is sometimes used ironically for some pleasing absurdity; as, this is delicious. Compare DELIGHTFUL.—Ant.: acrid, bitter, loathsome, nauseous, repulsive, unpalatable, unsavory.

de-light′, n. Great pleasure, gratification, or joyful satisfaction, or that which affords it. Syn.: see ENTERTAINMENT; HAPPINESS.

de-light′ful, 1 dı-lait′ful; 2 de-līt′ful, a. Affording delight; extremely gratifying; charming.

Syn.: acceptable, agreeable, congenial, delicious, grateful, gratifying, pleasant, pleasing, pleasurable, refreshing, satisfying, welcome. Agreeable refers to whatever gives a mild degree of pleasure; as, an agreeable perfume. Acceptable indicates a thing to be worthy of acceptance; as, an acceptable offering. Grateful is stronger than agreeable or gratifying, indicating whatever awakens a feeling akin to gratitude. A pleasant face and pleasing manners arouse pleasurable sensations, and make the possessor an agreeable companion; if possessed of intelligence, vivacity, and goodness, such a person's society will be delightful. Criminals may find each other's company congenial, but scarcely delightful. Satisfying denotes anything that is received with calm acquiescence, as substantial food, or established truth. That is welcome which is received with joyful heartiness; as, welcome tidings. See BEAUTIFUL; CHARMING; DELICIOUS; GRATEFUL; HAPPY; LOVELY.—Ant.: depressing, disappointing, distressing, hateful, horrible, melancholy, miserable, mournful, painful, saddening, woful, wretched.

Syn.: error, fallacy, fantasm, hallucination, illusion. A delusion is a mistaken conviction, an illusion a mistaken perception or inference. An illusion may be wholly of the senses; a delusion always involves some mental error. In an optical illusion the observer sees either what does not exist, or what exists otherwise than as he sees it, as when in a mirage distant springs and trees appear close at hand. We speak of the illusions of fancy or of hope, but of the delusions of the insane. A hallucination is a false image or belief which has nothing, outside of the disordered mind, to suggest it; as, the hallucinations of delirium tremens. Syn.: certainty, conclusion, consequence, deduction, evidence, induction, inference, proof. Demonstration, in the strict and proper sense, is the highest form of proof, and gives the most absolute certainty, but can not be applied outside of pure mathematics or other strictly deductive reasoning; there can be proof and certainty, however, in matters that do not admit of demonstration. A conclusion is the absolute and necessary result of the admission of certain premises; an inference is a probable conclusion toward which known facts, statements, or admissions point, but which they do not absolutely establish; sound premises, together with their necessary conclusion, constitute a demonstration. Evidence is that which tends to show a thing to be true; in the widest sense, as including self-evidence of consciousness, it is the basis of all knowledge. Proof in the strict sense is complete, irresistible evidence; as, there was much evidence against the accused, but not amounting to proof of guilt. Moral certainty is a conviction resting on such evidence as puts a matter beyond reasonable doubt, while not so irresistible as demonstration. Syn.: aim, device, end, final cause, intent, intention, object, plan, project, proposal, purpose, scheme. Design refers to the adaptation of means to an end, the correspondence and coordination of parts, or of separate acts, to produce a result; intent and purpose overleap all particulars, and fasten on the end itself. Intention is simply the more familiar form of the legal and philosophical intent. Plan relates to details of form, structure, and action, in themselves; design considers these same details all as a means to an end. The plan of a campaign may be for a series of sharp attacks, with the design of thus surprizing and overpowering the enemy. A man comes to a fixed intention to kill his enemy; he forms a plan to entrap him into his power, with the design of then compassing his death; as the law can not read the heart, it can only infer the intent from the evidences of design. Intent denotes a straining, stretching forth toward an object; purpose simply the placing it before oneself; hence, we speak of the purpose rather than the intent or intention of God. It is argued that the marks of design in nature prove it the work of a great Designer. Intention contemplates the possibility of failure; purpose looks to assured success; intent or intention refers especially to the state of mind of the actor; purpose to the result of the action. Compare AIM; CAUSE; END; IDEA: MODEL; PROJECT; PURPOSE; REASON.

de-sire′, 1 dı-zair′; 2 de-sīr′. I. vt. [DE-SIRED′; DE-SIR′-ING.] 1. To wish or long for the possession or enjoyment of; covet; crave. 2. To express a wish for; ask; pray for; request. 3‖. To regret; miss. 4†. To deserve; require. 5†. To invite. II. n. 1. An earnest wishing for something; longing; craving; yearning. 2. A request; wish; prayer. 3. An object desired. 4. Appetite; passion. [< L.F de, from, + sidus (sider-), star.]

Syn.: appetency, appetite, aspiration, concupiscence, coveting, craving, hankering, inclination, longing, proclivity, propensity, wish. Inclination is the mildest of these terms; it is a quiet, or even a vague or unconscious, tendency. Even when we speak of a strong or decided inclination we do not express the intensity of desire. Desire has a wide range, from the highest objects to the lowest; desire is for an object near at hand, or near in thought, and viewed as attainable; a wish may be for what is remote or uncertain, or even for what is recognized as impossible. Craving is stronger than hankering; hankering may be the result of a fitful and capricious appetite; craving may be the imperious and reasonable demand of the whole nature. Longing is a reaching out with deep and persistent demand for that which is viewed as now distant but at some time attainable; as, the captive's longing for release. Coveting ordinarily denotes wrong desire for that which is another's. Compare APPETITE; FANCY; INCLINATION.—Ant.: see synonyms for ANTIPATHY.—Prep.: of or for.

de-spair′, 1 dı-spâr′; 2 de-spâr′, v. I. i. To abandon all hope; be or become hopeless: often with of. II†. t. To lose hope or faith in.

de-spair′, n. 1. Utter hopelessness and discouragement. 2. That which causes despair or which is despaired of. [< L. despero, < de, from, + spes, hope.]

Syn.: desperation, despondency, discouragement, hopelessness. Discouragement is the result of so much repulse or failure as wears out courage. Discouragements too frequent and long continued may produce a settled hopelessness. Hopelessness is negative, and may result from simple apathy; despondency and despair are more emphatic and decided. Despondency is an incapacity for the present exercise of hope; despair is the utter abandonment of hope. Despondency relaxes energy and effort and is always attended with sadness or distress; despair may produce a stony calmness, or it may lead to desperation. Desperation is energized despair, vigorous in action, reckless of consequences.—Ant.: anticipation, assurance, cheer, confidence, courage, elation, encouragement, expectancy, expectation, hope, hopefulness, trust.

dic′tion, 1 dikᵊshən; 2 dĭcᵊshon, n. The use, choice, and arrangement of words and modes of expression. [< L. dictio(n-), < dico, say.]

Syn.: expression, language, phrase, phraseology, style, verbiage, vocabulary, wording, words. An author's diction is strictly his choice and use of words, with no special reference to thought; expression regards the words simply as the vehicle of the thought. Phrase and phraseology apply to words or combinations of words which are somewhat technical; as, in legal phraseology; in military phrase. Diction is general; wording is limited; we speak of the diction of an author or of a work, the wording of a proposition, of a resolution, etc. Verbiage never bears this sense (see CIRCUMLOCUTION). The language of a writer or speaker may be the national speech he employs; as, the English or French language; or the word may denote his use of that language; as, the author's language is well (or ill) chosen. Style includes diction, expression, rhetorical figures such as metaphor and simile, the effect of an author's prevailing tone of thought, of his personal traits—in short, all that makes up the clothing of thought in words; thus, we speak of a figurative style, a frigid thought in words; thus, we speak of a figurative style, a frigid or an argumentative style, etc., or of the style of Macaulay, of Prescott, or others. An author's vocabulary is the range of words which he brings into his use. Compare LANGUAGE.

die[1], 1 dαī; 2 dī, vi. [DIED; DY'ING.] 1. To suffer death; pass from life; decease; expire. 2. Figuratively, to cease to exist, as a quality or force. 3. To become insensible or indifferent: followed by to. 4. To discontinue; lose energy or power. 5. [Colloq.] To pine, as with love: a hyperbolical use. 6. Theol. To suffer spiritual death as a penalty for sin. [ME. dien, deyen, < Icel. deyja.]

Syn.: cease, decease, decline, depart, expire, fade, perish, wither Die, to go out of life, become destitute of vital power and action, is figuratively applied to anything which has the appearance of life.

Where the dying night-lamp flickers.
TENNYSON Locksley Hall st. 40.

An echo, a strain of music, a tempest, a topic, an issue, dies. Expire (literally, to breathe out) is a softer word for die: it is used figuratively of things that cease to exist by reaching a natural limit; as, a lease expires; the time has expired. To perish (literally, in Latin, to go through, as in English we say, "the fire goes out") is oftenest used of death by privation or exposure; as, "I perish with hunger," Luke xv, 17; sometimes, of death by violence. Knowledge and fame, art and empires, may be said to perish; the word denotes utter destruction and decay.—Ant.: be born, begin, be immortal, come into being, come to life, exist, flourish, grow, live, rise again, rise from the dead, survive.—Prep.: to die of fever; by violence; rarely, with the sword, famine, etc. (Ezek. vii, 15); to die for one's country; to die at sea; in one's bed; in agony; die to the world.

dif'fer-ence, 1 dif'ər-ens; 2 dĭf'er-ĕnc. I. vt. [-ENCED[t]; -ENC-ING.] To make or mark as different; distinguish; subtract. II. n. 1. The state or quality of being other or unlike, or that in which two things are unlike; distinction. 2. A disagreement in sentiment or opinion; controversy; quarrel. 3. A separate treatment; discrimination. 4. Math. The result obtained by subtracting one number from another. 5. Logic. The specific difference; differentia. 6. Com. A margin that has become payable.

Syn.: contrariety, contrast, disagreement, discrepancy, discrimination, disparity, dissimilarity, dissimilitude, distinction, divergence, diversity, inconsistency, inequality, unlikeness, variation, variety. Difference is the state or quality of being unlike or the amount of such unlikeness. A difference is in the things compared; a discrimination is in our judgment of them; a distinction is in our definition or description or mental image of them. Careful discrimination of real differences results in clear distinctions. Disparity is stronger than inequality, implying that one thing falls far below another; as, the disparity of our achievements when compared with our ideals. Dissimilarity is between things sharply contrasted; there may be a difference between those almost alike. There is a discrepancy in accounts that fail to balance. Variety involves more than two objects; so, in general, does diversity; variation is a difference in the condition or action of the same object at different times. Disagreement is not merely the lack, but the opposite, of agreement; it is a mild word for opposition and conflict; difference is sometimes used in the same sense. See REMAINDER.—Ant.: agreement, consonance, harmony, identity, likeness, resemblance, sameness, similarity, uniformity, unity.—Prep.: difference between the old and the new; differences among men; a difference in character; of action; of style; (less frequently) a difference (controversy) with a person; a difference of one thing from (incorrectly to) another.

dif'fer-ent, 1 dif'ər-ent; 2 dĭf'er-ĕnt, a. 1. Not the same; distinct; other. 2. Marked by a difference; unlike. Syn.: see CONTRARY.

dif"fer-en'ti-a, 1 dif"ər-en'shi-ə; 2 dĭf"er-ĕn'shi-a, n. [-TI-Æ, pl.] Logic. A specific difference; a characteristic attribute distinguishing a species from others of the same genus. [L.]

dif"fer-en'tial, 1 dif"ər-en'shəl; 2 dĭf"er-ĕn'shal. I. a. 1. Relating to, making, or marked by a difference. 2. Distinctive; discriminative. 3. Math. Pertaining to or involving differentials. II. n. Math. An infinitesimal difference between two values of a quantity.—dif"fer-en'tial-ly, adv.

dif"fer-en'ti-ate, 1 dif"ər-en'shi-ēt; 2 dĭf"er-ĕn'shi-āt, v. [-AT"ED[d]; -AT"ING.] I. t. 1. To constitute a difference between; be a mark distinguishing from. 2. To discriminate and indicate the specific differences of, as of new species. 3. To institute and establish a difference between; as, many words once synonymous are now differentiated. 4. Biol. To cause to become different; specialize in form or functions; develop variation in or among, as in plants by cultivation. 5. Math. To derive the differential of (a function) in terms of that of a variable on which it depends. II. i. To acquire a distinct and separate character. Syn.: see CONTRAST.—dif"fer-en-ti-a'tion, n. The act, process, or result of differentiating.

dif'fi-cult, 1 dif'ī-kult; 2 dĭf'i-cŭlt, a. 1. Hard to do or be done; arduous; perplexing. 2. Hard to persuade, overcome, or satisfy; intractable; exacting.

Syn.: arduous, exhausting, hard, laborious, onerous, severe, toilsome, trying. Arduous (L. arduus, steep) signifies primarily so steep and lofty as to be difficult of ascent, and hence applies to that which involves great and sustained exertion and ordinarily for a lofty aim; great learning can only be won by arduous toil. Hard applies to anything that resists our endeavors as a scarcely penetrable mass resists our physical force. Anything is hard that involves tax and strain whether of the physical or mental powers. Difficult is not used of that which merely taxes physical force; a dead lift is called hard rather than difficult; breaking stone on the road would be called hard rather than difficult work; that is difficult which involves skill, sagacity, or address, with or without a considerable expenditure of physical force; a geometrical problem may be difficult to solve, a tangled skein to unravel; a mountain difficult to ascend. Hard may be active or passive; a thing may be hard to do or hard to bear. Arduous is always active. That which is laborious or toilsome simply requires the steady application of labor or toil till accomplished; toilsome is the stronger word. That which is onerous (L. onus, a burden) is mentally burdensome or oppressive. Responsibility may be onerous even when it involves no special exertion. See ARDUOUS; HARD; OBSCURE; SQUEAMISH; TROUBLESOME.—Ant.: easy, facile, light, pleasant, slight, trifling, trivial.

Syn.: affection, ailment, complaint, disorder, distemper, ill health, illness, indisposition, infirmity, malady, sickness, unhealthiness, unsoundness. Disease is the general term for any deviation from health; in a more limited sense it denotes some definite morbid condition; disorder and affection are rather partial and limited; as, a nervous affection; a disorder of the digestive system. Sickness was generally used in English speech and literature, till the close of the eighteenth century at least, for every form of physical disorder, as abundantly appears in the English Bible: "Elisha was fallen sick of his sickness whereof he died," 2 Kings xiii, 14. There is now, in England, a tendency to restrict the words sick and sickness to nausea, or "sickness at the stomach," and to hold ill and illness as the only proper words to use in a general sense. This distinction has received a limited acceptance in the United States, where sick and sickness have the earlier and wider usage. We speak of trifling ailments, a slight indisposition, a serious or a deadly disease; a slight or severe illness; a painful sickness or illness, a condition or state of ill health, an insidious, serious, severe, or deadly disease. Complaint is a popular term, which may be applied to any degree of ill health, slight or severe. Infirmity denotes a chronic or lingering weakness or disability, as blindness or lameness. See ILLNESS.—Ant.: health, robustness, soundness, strength, sturdiness, vigor.

[< AS. don. In part < AS. dugan, suit.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, actualize, bring about, bring to pass, carry out, carry through, commit, complete, consummate, discharge, effect, execute, finish, fulfil, perform, perpetrate, realize, transact, work out. Do is the one comprehensive word which includes this whole class. We may say of the least item of daily work, "It is done," and of the grandest human achievement, "Well done!" To discharge is to do what is given in charge, expected, or required; we may say to do or to discharge one's duty, the duty or duties of one's office, station, position, etc., where discharge is the more formal and technical word, signifying to perform to the last and utmost all that is required. Commit, as applied to actions, is used only of those that are bad, whether grave or trivial; perpetrate is used chiefly of aggravated crimes, or, somewhat humorously, of blunders. A man may commit a sin, a trespass, or a murder; perpetrate an outrage or a felony. Perform is used generally in a good sense; as, to perform a task, a duty, a service, etc. Compare PERFORM, under ACCOMPLISH. We finish a garment or a letter, complete an edifice or a life-work, consummate a bargain or a crime, discharge a duty, effect a purpose, execute a command, fulfil a promise, perform our daily tasks, realize an ideal, accomplish a design, achieve a victory. [F., < L. doctrina, < doctor; see DOCTOR, n.]

Syn.: article of belief, article of faith, belief, dogma, precept, principle, teaching, tenet. Doctrine primarily signifies that which is taught; principle, the fundamental basis on which the teaching rests. A doctrine is reasoned out, and may be defended by reasoning; a dogma rests on authority, as of direct revelation, the decision of the church, etc. A doctrine or dogma is a statement of some one item of belief; a creed is a summary of doctrines or dogmas. Dogma has commonly, at the present day, an offensive signification, as of a belief arrogantly asserted. Tenet is simply that which is held, and is applied to a single item of belief; it is a neutral word, neither approving nor condemning; we speak of the doctrines of our own church; of the tenets of others. A precept relates to conduct, not to belief. Compare FAITH; LAW. —doc"tri-naire'. 1. a. Theoretical; visionary. II. n. One whose views are derived from theories rather than from facts; a scholastic or impracticable theorist.—doc'tri-nal, a. 1. Pertaining to or characterized by doctrine. 2. Having to do with teaching; instructive. Dogmatic theology, called also "dogmatics," gives definite propositions, which it holds to be delivered by authority; systematic theology considers the same propositions in their logical connection and order as parts of a system; a doctrinal statement is less absolute in its claims than a dogmatic treatise, and may be less complete than the term systematic would imply. Outside of theology, dogmatic has generally an offensive sense; a dogmatic statement is one for which the author does not trouble himself to give a reason, either because of the strength of his convictions, or because of his contempt for those whom he addresses; thus dogmatic is, in common use, allied with arrogant and kindred words. See ABSOLUTE; IMPERIOUS.

doubt[d], ‖ 1 daut; 2 dout, v. I. t. To dout[s], ‖ hesitate to accept; hold as uncertain; distrust.

iI. i. To be in doubt. [< L.F dubito, be uncertain.]

Syn.: distrust, mistrust, surmise, suspect. To doubt is to lack conviction. Incompleteness of evidence may compel one to doubt, or some perverse bias of mind may incline him to. Distrust may express simply a lack of confidence; as, I distrust my own judgment; or it may be nearly equivalent to suspect; as, I distrusted that man from the start. Mistrust and suspect imply that one is almost assured of positive evil; one may distrust himself or others; he suspects others. Mistrust is now rarely, if ever, used of persons, but only of motives, intentions, etc. Distrust is always serious: mistrust is often used playfully. Compare DOUBT, n.; QUESTION; SUPPOSE.—Ant.: believe, confide in, depend on, depend upon, rely on, rely upon, trust.—doubt'er, n. One who doubts.

doubt, n. 1. Lack of certain knowledge; uncertainty; indecision. 2. A question requiring settlement; an objection; perplexity; problem.

Syn.: disbelief, distrust, hesitancy, hesitation, incredulity, indecision, irresolution, misgiving, perplexity, question, scruple, skepticism, suspense, suspicion, unbelief, uncertainty. Doubt is lack of conviction; disbelief is conviction to the contrary; unbelief refers to a settled state of mind, generally accompanied with opposition of heart. Perplexity is active and painful; doubt may be quiescent. Perplexity presses toward a solution; doubt may be content to linger unresolved. Any improbable statement awakens incredulity. In theological usage, unbelief and skepticism have a condemnatory force, as implying wilful rejection of manifest truth. As regards practical matters, uncertainty applies to the unknown or undecided; doubt implies some negative evidence. Suspense regards the future, and is eager and anxious; uncertainty may relate to any period, and be quite indifferent. Misgiving is ordinarily in regard to the outcome of something already done or decided; hesitation, indecision, and irresolution have reference to something that remains to be decided or done and are due oftener to infirmity of will than to lack of knowledge. Distrust and suspicion apply especially to the motives, character, etc., of others, and are more decidedly adverse than doubt. Scruple relates to matters of conscience and duty. See PERPLEXITY; QUESTION.—Ant.: assurance, belief, certainty, confidence, conviction, decision, determination, persuasion, resolution, resolve.

[ME. drawen, < AS. dragan.]

Syn.: allure, attract, drag, entice, haul, incline, induce, lead, lure, pull, tow, tug. One object draws another when it moves it toward itself or in the direction of its own motion by the exertion of adequate force, whether slight or powerful. To attract is to exert a force that tends to draw, tho it may produce no actual motion: all objects are attracted toward the earth, tho they may be sustained from falling. To drag is to draw against strong resistance; as, to drag a sled over bare ground, or a carriage up a steep hill. To pull is to exert a drawing force, whether adequate or inadequate; as, the fish pulls on the line; a dentist pulls a tooth. To tug is to draw, or try to draw, a resisting object with a continuous straining motion; as, to tug at the oar. To haul is to draw somewhat slowly a heavy object; as, to haul a seine; to haul logs. One vessel tows another. In the figurative sense, attract is more nearly akin to incline, draw to induce. We are attracted by one's appearance, drawn to his side. See ACTUATE; ALLURE; INFLUENCE.—Ant.: alienate, estrange, rebuff, reject, repel, repulse. See synonyms for DRIVE.

dream, n. A train of thoughts or images passing through the mind in sleep; also, a visionary idea, anticipation, or fancy. [AS drēam.*]

Syn.: day-dream, fancy, fantasy, hallucination, illusion, reverie, romance, trance, vision. A dream is strictly a train of thoughts, fantasies, and images passing through the mind during sleep; a vision may occur when one is awake and in clear exercise of the senses and mental powers; vision is often applied to something seen by the mind through supernatural agency, whether in sleep or wakefulness, conceived as more real and authoritative than a dream; a trance is an abnormal state, which is different from normal sleep or wakefulness. A reverie is a purposeless drifting of the mind when awake, under the influence of mental images; a day-dream that which passes before the mind in such condition. A fancy is some image presented to the mind, often in the fullest exercise of its powers. Hallucination is the seeming perception of non-existent objects, as in insanity or delirium. In the figurative sense, we speak of dreams of fortune, visions of glory, with little difference of meaning except that the vision is thought of as fuller and more vivid. We speak of a trance of delight when the emotion almost sweeps one away from the normal exercise of the faculties. Compare DELUSION.—Ant.: certainty, fact, reality, realization, substance, verity.

dress, n. 1. Covering for the body; clothes collectively; especially, elegant or fashionable attire. 2. A gown or frock of a woman or child. 3. Full dress as opposed to business attire, etc. 4. Dressing or size, as of leather.

Syn.: apparel, array, attire, clothes, clothing, costume, garb, garments, habiliments, habit, raiment, robes, uniform, vestments, vesture. Clothing denotes the entire covering of the body, taken as a whole; clothes and garments view it as composed of separate parts. Clothes, clothing, and garments may be used of inner or outer covering; all the other words in the list (with possible rare exceptions in the case of raiment) refer to the outer garments. Array, raiment, and vesture are archaic or poetic; so, too, is habit, except in technical use to denote a lady's riding-dress. The word vestments is now rare, except in ecclesiastical use. Apparel and attire are most frequently used of somewhat complete and elegant outer clothing, tho Shakespeare speaks of "poor and mean attire." Dress may be used, specifically, for a woman's gown, and in that sense may be either rich or shabby; but in the general sense it denotes outer clothing which is meant to be elegant, complete, and appropriate to some social or public occasion; as, full dress, court dress, evening dress, etc. Dress has now largely displaced apparel and attire. Garb denotes the clothing characteristic of some class, profession, or the like; as, the garb of a priest. Costume is chiefly used for that which befits an assumed character; as, a theatrical costume; we sometimes speak of a national costume, etc. See HABIT.—Ant.: bareness, disarray, dishabille, exposure, nakedness, nudity, undress.—dress coat, a coat for evening wear, having the skirts cut away over the hips.—dress'mak"er, n. One who makes dresses for women or children.—dress'mak"ing, n.—dress'y, a. [Colloq.] Fond of dress; showy; elegant.—dress'i-ness, n.

Syn.: compel, impel, propel, push, repel, repulse, resist, ride, thrust, urge on. To drive is to move an object with some force or violence before or away from oneself; it is the direct reverse of draw, lead, etc. A man leads a horse by the halter, drives him with whip and rein. One may be driven to a thing or from it; hence, drive is a synonym equally for compel or for repel or repulse. Repulse is stronger and more conclusive than repel; one may be repelled by the very aspect of the person whose favor he seeks, but is not repulsed except by the direct refusal or ignoring of his suit. It is common to speak of driving in a carriage, riding upon a horse; tho in Scripture we read of riding in a chariot (2 Kings ix, 16; Jer. xvii, 25, etc.); good examples of the same usage may be found abundantly in the older English. Many good authorities use ride in the older and broader sense as signifying to be supported and borne along by any means of conveyance. Compare ACTUATE; BANISH; COMPEL; INFLUENCE; PUSH; THROW. —Ant.: see synonyms for DRAW.

—driv'er, n. 1. One who or that which drives; a coachman; locomotive-engineer. 2. Driving-wheel. 3. Naut. A four-cornered fore-and-aft sail.—driv'ing-wheel", n. A wheel imparting motion to other wheels, or to a machine.

Syn.: copy, counterpart, facsimile, imitation, likeness, replica, reproduction, transcript. A copy is as nearly like the original as the copyist has power to make it; a duplicate is exactly like the original; a carbon copy of a typewritten document must be a duplicate; we may have an inaccurate copy, but never an inaccurate duplicate. A facsimile is like the original in appearance; a duplicate is the same as the original in substance and effect; a facsimile of the Declaration of Independence is not a duplicate. A facsimile of a key might be quite useless; a duplicate will open the lock. A counterpart exactly corresponds to another object, but perhaps without design, while a copy is intentional. An imitation is always thought of as inferior to the original; as, an imitation of Milton. A replica is a copy of a work of art by the maker of the original. In law, a copy of an instrument has in itself no authority; the signatures, as well as other matters, may be copied; a duplicate is really an original, containing the same provisions and signed by the same persons, so that it may have in all respects the same force and effect; a transcript is an official copy, authenticated by the signature of the proper officer, and by the seal of the appropriate court. While strictly there could be but one duplicate, the word is now extended to an indefinite number of exact copies.—Ant.: archetype, model, original, pattern, prototype.

[< DUE.]

Syn.: accountability, business, function, obligation, office, responsibility, right, righteousness. Etymologically, duty is that which is owed or due; obligation, that to or by which one is bound; right, that which is correct, straight, or in the direct line of truth and goodness; responsibility, that for which one must answer. Duty and responsibility are thought of as to some person or persons; right is impersonal. One's duty may be to others or to himself; his obligations and responsibilities are to others. Duty arises from the nature of things; obligation and responsibility may be created by circumstances, as by one's own promise, or by the acceptance of a trust, etc. We speak of a parent's duty, a debtor's obligation; or of a child's duty of obedience, and a parent's responsibility for the child's welfare. Right is that which accords with the moral system of the universe. Righteousness is right incarnated in action. In a more limited sense, right may be used of what one may rightly claim, and so be the converse of duty. It is the creditor's right to demand payment, and the debtor's duty to pay. Compare BUSINESS; TAX; VIRTUE.

Syn.: breeding, cultivation, culture, development, discipline, information, instruction, knowledge, learning, nurture, reading, schooling, study, teaching, training, tuition. Education (L. educere, to lead or draw out) is the systematic development and cultivation of the mind and other natural powers. Education is the harmonious development of all our faculties. It begins in the nursery, and goes on at school, but does not end there. It continues through life, whether we will or not. Instruction, the impartation of knowledge by others (L. instruere, to build in or into), is but a part of education, often the smallest part. Teaching is the more familiar and less formal word for instruction. Training refers not merely to the impartation of knowledge, but to the exercising of one in actions with the design to form habits. Discipline is systematic and rigorous training, with the idea of subjection to authority and perhaps of punishment. Tuition is the technical term for teaching as the business of an instructor or as in the routine of a school; tuition is narrower than teaching, not, like the latter word, including training. We speak of the teaching, training, or discipline, rather than of the education or tuition of a dog or a horse. Compare KNOWLEDGE; LEARNING; NURTURE; REFINEMENT; WISDOM.—Ant.: ignorance, illiteracy. Compare synonyms for IGNORANT.—ed″u-ca′tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to education.—-ly, adv.—ed″u-ca′tion-a-ry, a.—ed″u-ca′tion-ist, n. One versed in educational theories.—ed′u-ca-tiv(e[s], a.—ed′u-ca″tor, n. A teacher.

ef-fect', 1 e-fekt'; 2 ĕ-fĕct', vt. To bring about; bring to an issue or to full success; cause; produce; achieve; accomplish. [< L. effectus, pp. of efficio, < ex, out, + facio, do.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, carry out, carry through, close, complete, conclude, consummate, do, end, execute, finish, fulfil, make effective, perform, produce, put in action, put in (or into) effect, put in operation, put through, realize, set in motion. Effect, execute, consummate, and realize all signify to embody in fact what was before in thought. One may realize that which he has done nothing to bring about; he may realize the dreams of youth by inheriting a fortune; but he can not effect his early designs except by doing the utmost that is necessary to make them fact. Effect includes all that is done to accomplish the intent; execute refers rather to the final steps; consummate is limited quite sharply to the concluding act. An officer executes the law when he proceeds against its violators; a purchase is consummated when the money is paid and the property delivered. Execute refers more commonly to the commands of another, effect and consummate to one's own designs; as, the commander effected the capture of the fort, because his officers and men promptly executed his commands. See ACCOMPLISH; DO; FINISH; MAKE.

ef-fi'cient, 1 e-fish'ent; 2 ē-fĭsh'ĕnt, a. 1. Acting, or having power to act, effectually; competent. 2. Productive of effects; causative. [< L. efficien(t-)s, ppr. of efficio; see EFFECT.]

Syn.: effective, effectual, efficacious. That is effective which accomplishes an intended effect with emphasis, decision, and certainty; that is effectual which acts with such finality as to leave no more to be done. Effective measures will put an effectual stop to objectionable proceedings. That is efficient which is thought of as acting or capable of acting continuously, and with energy equal to any demand; thus, an efficient cause is an agency from the action of which an effect necessarily and certainly follows. That is efficacious which is thought of as having power, which may be active or may continue latent, to produce an effectual result; as, a medicine efficacious against fever. A person may be said to be efficient in general character or action; as, an efficient business man; he may be called effective in some special relation; as, an effective speaker; the efficient person is habitually energetic, industrious, sagacious, and alert; a man may be an effective speaker on occasion who is not efficient in ordinary life. Efficacious and effectual are not used of persons.—Ant.: awkward, dull, feckless, feeble, fruitless, idle, ineffective, ineffectual, inefficacious, inefficient, inoperative, negligent, powerless, remiss, unavailing, useless, vain.

—ef-fi'cien-cy, n. 1. The character of being efficient; effectiveness. 2. Mech. The ratio of effect produced to the energy expended. ef-fi'ciencɛ†. Syn.: see ABILITY; POWER.—ef-fi'cient-ly, adv.

ef-front'er-y, 1 e-frunt'ər-ɪ; 2 ē-frŏnt'er-y, n. [-ER-IESᶻ, ef-frunt'er-yᶠᵖ,] pl.] Insolent assurance; audacity; impudence. [< L.ᶠᵉ ex, out, + fron(t-)s, forehead.]

Syn.: assurance, audacity, boldness, brass, hardihood, impudence, insolence, shamelessness. Audacity, in the sense here considered, is a reckless defiance of law, decency, public opinion, or personal rights, claims, or views, approaching the meaning of impudence or shamelessness, but always carrying the thought of the personal risk that one disregards in such defiance; the merely impudent or shameless person may take no thought of consequences; the audacious person recognizes and recklessly braves them. Hardihood defies and disregards the rational judgment of men. Effrontery (L. effrons, barefaced, shameless) adds to audacity and hardihood the special element of defiance of considerations of propriety, duty, and respect for others, yet not to the extent implied in impudence or shamelessness. Impudence disregards what is due to superiors: shamelessness defies decency. Boldness is forward-stepping courage, spoken of with reference to the presence and observation of others; boldness, in the good sense, is courage viewed from the outside; but the word is frequently used in an unfavorable sense to indicate a lack of proper sensitiveness and modesty. Compare ASSURANCE; BRAVE; IMPUDENCE.—Ant.: bashfulness, coyness, diffidence, modesty, sensitiveness, shrinking, shyness, timidity.

ef-ful'gence, 1 e-ful'jens; 2 ē-fŭl'ġĕnç, n. A shining forth brilliantly; beaming brightness; splendor. [< L. ex, forth, + fulgeo, shine.]—ef-fulge', vt. & vi. To beam or shine forth in great luster; radiate.—ef-ful'gent, a.—ef-ful'gent-ly, adv.

From Greek elektron, amber: a combining form representing electric in composition.—e-lec"tro-chem'is-try, n. The branch of chemistry that treats of electricity as active in effecting chemical change. — e-lec"tro-chem'i-cal, a. — e-lec"tro-chem'i-cal-ly, adv.—e-lec"tro-chem'ist, n.—e-lec'tro-cute, etc. See ELECTRICUTE.—e-lec'trode, n. Either of the two poles of an electric battery or dynamo.—e-lec"tro-de-pos'it. Iᵈ. vt. To deposit chemically, as metal from a solution, by means of an electric current. II. n. That which is so deposited.—e-lec"tro-dep"o-si'tion, n. The process of electrodepositing.—e-lec"tro-dy-nam'ic, a. Relating to forces of attraction and repulsion, produced by electric currents.—e-lec"tro-dy-nam'ics, n. The branch of physics treating of electric currents, induction, etc.—e-lec"tro-kinet'ic, a. Pertaining to or caused by electricity in motion.

e-lec"tro-lier', 1 ı-lek"tro-lır'; 2 e-lĕc"tro-lēr', n. A fixture for holding electric lamps: not a good form.

e-lec-trol'y-sis, n. Decomposition of a chemical compound by an electric current.—e-lec'tro-lyte, n. A chemical compound which can be decomposed by an electric current.—e-lec″tro-lyt′ic, a. Relating to electrolysis. e-lec″tro-lyt′i-cal‡.—e-lec′tro-lyze, vt. To decompose by electric current.—e-lec″tro-mag′net, n. A core of soft iron or the like, which temporarily becomes a magnet during the passage of an electric current through a coil of wire surrounding it.—e-lec″tro-mag-net′ic, a.—e-lec″tro-mag′net-ism, n. 1. Magnetism developed by electricity. 2. That science which treats of the relations between electricity and magnetism and the phenomena due to these relations. e-lec″tro-mag-net′ics‡.—e-lec-trom′e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring an electric current.—e-lec′tro-mo″tiv(eꝭ, a. Relating to electricity in motion; as, electromotive force.—e-lec″tro-mo′tor, n. 1. An electric motor. 2. Any electric source, as a voltaic cell.—e-lec′tron, n. The smallest known component of matter; always possessing a negative electric charge.—e-lec″tro-neg′a-tiv(eꝭ, a. Having the property of becoming negatively electrified by contact with, or from the chemical action of, another substance.—e-lec-trop′a-thy, n. The treatment of disease by means of electricity.—e-lec″tro-path′ic, a.—e-lec-troph′o-rus, n. An instrument for generating static electricity by induction: commonly a flat disk of resin, to which may be applied another of wood coated with tin-foil. e-lec′tro-phore‡,—e-lec′tro-plate, vt. To coat with metal, as silver or gold, by electric means.—e-lec′tro-plate, n. An electroplated article.—e-lec″tro-pos′i-tiv(eꝭ, a. Having the property of becoming positively electrified by contact with, or from the chemical action of, another substance.—e-lec′tro-scope, n. An instrument for detecting the presence of electricity.—e-lec″tro-scop′ic, a.—e-lec″tro-stat′ics, n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the phenomena of electricity at rest or of frictional electricity.—e-lec″tro-stat′ic, a. e-lec″tro-stat′i-cal‡.—e-lec″tro-stat′i-cal-ly, adv.—e-lec″tro-tech′nics, n. The science of the methods, processes, and operations by which electricity is applied in the industrial arts.—e-lec″tro-tech′nic, e-lec″tro-tech′ni-cal, a.—e-lec″tro-te-leg′ra-phy, n. Telegraphy by electricity.—e-lec″tro-tel″e-graph′ic, a.—e-lec″tro-ther″a-peu′tics, n. The treatment of disease by electricity, or the laws, etc., of such treatment. e-lec″tro-ther′a-py‡.—e-lec″tro-ther″a-peu′tic, -ti-cal, a.—e-lec′tro-type, n. A metallic copy of any surface, as a coin, made by electric deposition, especially one of a page of type for printing.—e-lec′tro-type, vt.—e-lec′tro-typ″er, n. 1. One who electrotypes. e-lec′tro-typ″ist‡. 2. [Eng.] The bath holding the electrotyping solution.—e-lec″tro-typ′ic, a. Pertaining to or made by electrotyping.—e-lec′tro-typ″ing, n. The act or business of forming electrotypes.—e-lec′tro-typ″y, n. The process or art of electrotyping.

Condensing Electroscope.
a, insulated handle for removing upper plate; b, gold-leaf; c, metallic poles connecting with an electric source.

e-lec′trum, 1 ı-lek″trum; 2 e-lēc′trŭm, n. 1. German silver or other like alloy. 2. Anciently, amber. e-lec′tron‡. 3. Native gold containing a large percentage of silver. [L., < Gr. ēlektron, amber.]

e-lec′tu-a-ry, 1 ı-lek′chu-[or -tiu-]ē-rı; 2 e-lēc′chu-[or -tū-]ā-ry, n. [-RIES^{z}, pl.] A confection made by incorporating a medicine with some sweet substance. [< LL. electuarium, < Gr. ekleikton, < ek, out, + leichō, lick.]

el″e-e-mos′y-na-ry, 1 el″ı-ı-mos′ı-nē-rı; 2 ĕl″e-e-mŏs′y-nā-ry. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or dependent on charity or alms; charitable. II. n. [-RIES^{z}, pl.] A recipient of charity. [< Gr. eleēmosynē, ALMS.]

el′e-gant, 1 el′ı-gənt; 2 ĕl′e-gant, a. 1. Marked by refinement, grace, or symmetry; possessing or exhibiting refined taste. 2. Possessing a fine sense of beauty or fitness. 3. [Colloq.] Excellent; capital. [OF., < L. elegan(t-)s, < eligo; see ELECT.]

Syn.: dainty, exquisite. Elegant (Latin elegans, select) refers to the lighter, finer elements of beauty in form or motion. Exquisite denotes the utmost perfection of the elegant in minute details; we speak of an elegant garment, an exquisite lace. Exquisite is also applied to intense keenness of any feeling; as, exquisite delight; exquisite pain. Dainty, at its best, applies to what is at once slight, delicate, and pleasing; in its extreme use, it may apply to sensibilities or feelings too delicate for the demands of practical life, over-nice, squeamish. See BEAUTIFUL; CHOICE; FINE; POLITE.—Ant.: common, coarse, harsh, rude.

—el′e-gant-ly, adv.—el′e-gance, n. 1. The state or quality of being elegant or refined. 2. Anything elegant. el′e-gan-cy‡ [-CIES^{z}, pl.]. Syn.: see POLITENESS.

e-le′gi-ac, 1 ı-lī′jı-ak or el″ı-jaı′ak; 2 e-lē′gi-āc or ĕl″e-ǧī′ăc. I. a. 1. Pertaining to elegies; of the nature of an elegy; sad; plaintive. 2. Anc. Pros. Written in the meter of elegy. el″e-gi′a-cal‡. II. n. 1. Gr. & L. Pros. A verse peculiar to elegy. 2. An elegy.

el′e-gy, 1 el′ı-jı; 2 ĕl′e-gy, n. [-GIES^{z}, pl.] 1. A funeral song; a meditative poem with sorrowful theme. 2. A classical poem written in elegiac verse. [< Gr. elegeia, < elegos, mourning song.]—el′e-gist, n. A writer of elegies. e-le′gi-ast‡; el″e-gi-og′ra-pher‡.—el′e-gize, v. [-GIZED; -GIZ″ING.] I. t. To compose an elegy on; lament. II. i. To write in elegiac verse or style.

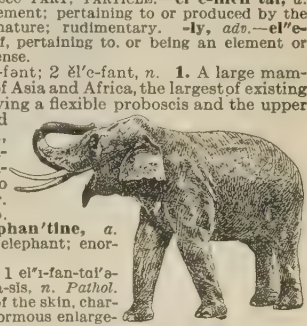
el′e-ment, 1 el′ı-ment or -mənt; 2 ĕl′e-ment, n. 1. A component or essential part; especially, a simple part of anything complex; a constituent; ingredient. 2. pl. (1) First principles or fundamental ideas; rudiments. (2) The bread and wine of the Lord's Supper. 3. An ultimate and essential principle in the make-up of anything; essential constituent; anciently, one of the substances—earth, air, fire, and water—supposed to make up all things: still in popular use; as, the fury of the elements; the devouring element. 4. The natural sphere or environment; as, the element of fishes is water. 5. Chem. That form of matter which can not be decomposed by any means known to science. More than eighty such substances are now recognized. A belief prevails with some that all these are modifications of a single primal hypothetical substance called protyle. See table on pp. 268, 269. 6. Biol. One of the primary parts of an organism; also, a cell or morphological unit. 7. Math. One of a number of parts composing a symmetrical whole. 8. Elec. One of the dissimilar substances in a voltaic cell or battery, etc. [< L. elementum, first principle.] Syn.: see PART; PARTICLE.—el″e-men′tal, a. Relating to an element; pertaining to or produced by the great forces of nature; rudimentary. -ly, adv.—el″e-men′ta-ry, a. Of, pertaining to, or being an element or elements, in any sense.

el′e-phant, 1 el′ı-fənt; 2 ĕl′e-fant, n. 1. A large mammal of Asia and Africa, the largest of existing land-animals, having a flexible proboscis and the upper incisors developed as tusks. 2. Fig., something unwieldy, burdensome, or hard to dispose of. [< Gr. elephas, < Heb. eleph, ox.]—el″e-phan′tine, a. Pertaining to an elephant; enormous; unwieldy.



Asiatic Elephant. 1/108

el″e-phan-ti′a-sis, 1 el″ı-fan-taı′a-sis; 2 ĕl″e-fān-tī′a-sis, n. Pathol. A chronic disease of the skin, characterized by an enormous enlargement of the part affected, usually the legs, and the hardening of the skin. [L., < Gr. elephantiasis, < elephas, ELEPHANT.]

El″eu-sin′i-a, 1 el″yu-sin′ı-ə; 2 ĕl″yu-sin′ī-a, n. pl. The Athenian festival and mysteries in honor of Demeter and Persephone, at Eleusis, near Athens. [Gr.] Eleusinian mysteries‡.—El″eu-sin′i-an, a.

el′e-vate, 1 el′ı-vēt; 2 ĕl′e-vāt, vt. [-VAT″ED^{d}; -VAT″ING.] 1. To raise from a lower to a higher place, rank, or character; promote; exalt. 2. To raise the spirits of; cheer; inspire. 3. To raise the pitch or increase the loudness of. [< L. e, out, + levo, lighten.] Syn.: see HEIGHTEN; PROMOTE; RAISE.—el′e-vat″ed. 1. pa. 1. Lofty in situation; high; as, an elevated plateau. 2. Lofty in character; sublime. II. n. [U. S.] An overhead railroad. Syn.: see GRAND; HIGH.—el″e-va′tion, n. 1. The act of elevating; exaltation. 2. An elevated place. 3. Drawing. The front view of a building or the like. 4. Slight intoxication. 5. Eccl. The raising of the eucharistic elements. Syn.: see HEIGHT; RAMPART.—el′e-va″tor, n. 1. One who or that which elevates; a hoisting-mechanism for grain, or a warehouse where grain is elevated and distributed; also, a movable platform or cage in a building, for carrying freight or passengers up or down. 2. Aero. In flying-machines, a plane by the tilting or dipping of which the ascent or descent of a machine is regulated.

e-lev′en, 1 ı-lev′n; 2 e-lĕv′n. I. a. Consisting of one more than ten. II. n. 1. The sum of ten and one. 2. A team or side of eleven players, as in cricket or football. [< AS. endleofan.]—e-lev′enth. I. a. 1. Next in order after the tenth. 2. Being one of eleven equal parts. II. n. One of eleven equal parts.

elf§, 1 elf; 2 ĕlf, vt. To twist or entangle, as the hair, a supposed practise of the elves.

elf, n. [ELVES, pl.] In folk-lore, a dwarfish, mischievous sprite; a dwarf. [< AS. ælf.]—elf′-child″, n. A child believed to have been left by elves in place of one that they have stolen; a changeling.—elf′in. I. a. Relating or belonging to elves. II. n. 1. An elf. 2. A sportive child.—elf′ish, a. Relating to elves; mischievous. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—elf′-land, n. The supposed home of the elves; fairyland.—elf′-lock, n. A lock of hair tangled as if by elves; a straggling lock.

TABLE OF CHEMICAL ELEMENTS.—Atomic Weights revised by FRANK WIGGLESWORTH CLARKE, chief chemist of the United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

In the above table the Mendelejeff classification has been mainly followed. Formerly elements were grouped according to their resemblance to some member, as the Potassium group, the Calcium group, the Magnesium group, etc. Since the acceptance of the periodic law elements have been arranged in the order of their atomic weights, and each group shows indications of an arithmetical progression. See PERIODIC LAW, under LAW.

The factors in the columns of specific gravities and melting-points naturally vary with the form that the element takes (e. g., in carbon the specific gravity varies as diamond, charcoal, or lampblack is taken), but as far as possible the factor of the most typical form is given.

em-ploy', 1 em-plei'; 2 ĕm-plŏy'. I. vt. To have in service; furnish work for; make use of; use; apply. II. n. The state of being employed; service. [< L.^{F} in, in, + plico, fold.]

Syn.: engage, engross, hire, make use of, use, use up. In general terms it may be said that to employ is to devote to one's purpose, to use is to render subservient to one's purpose; what is used is viewed as more absolutely an instrument than what is employed; a merchant employs a clerk; he uses pen and paper; hence, use, as applied to persons, inclines to the derogatory sense; as, the conspirators used him as a go-between. That which is used is often consumed in the using, or in familiar phrase used up; as, we used twenty tons of coal last winter; in such cases we could not substitute employ. A person may be employed in his own work or in that of another; in the latter case the service is always understood to be for pay. In this connection employ is a word of more dignity than hire; a general is employed in his country's service; a mercenary adventurer is hired to fight a tyrant's battles; hire now implies that the one hired works directly and primarily for the pay, as expressed in the noun "hireling." See OCCUPY; RETAIN. Compare BUSINESS.— Prep.: Employ in, on, upon, or about a work, business, etc.; for a purpose; at a stipulated salary.

end[d], 1 end; 2 ĕnd, v. I. t. 1. To put an end to; come to the end of; finish. 2. To form the end of. 3. To terminate the life of; kill. 4. To fit or add an end to or into. 5. To set on end. II. i. 1. To come to an end; conclude. 2. To issue or result. 3. To be laid at or by the end. [< AS. endian, < ende, end.]

Syn.: break off, cease, close, complete, conclude, desist, expire, finish, quit, stop, terminate, wind up. That ends, or is ended, of which there is no more, whether or not more was intended or needed; that is closed, completed, concluded, or finished which has come to an expected or appropriate end. A tumult in the audience may cause a speech to be ended when it is neither closed, completed, nor finished, nor, in the strict sense, concluded. An argument may be closed with nothing proved; when an argument is concluded all that is deemed necessary to prove the point has been stated. To finish is to do the last thing there is to do; as, "I have finished my course," 2 Tim. iv, 7. The enumeration is completed; the poem, the picture, the statue is finished. To terminate may be either to bring to an arbitrary or to an appropriate end; as, he terminated his remarks abruptly; the spire terminates in a cross. A speaker desists when he refrains from proceeding with his remarks; a lease expires when the period of time which it had to run terminates. A thing stops that comes to rest from motion: or the motion stops or ceases when the object comes to rest; stop frequently signifies to bring or come to a sudden and decided cessation of motion, progress, or action of any kind. Compare ABOLISH; CEASE; DO; EFFECT; FINISH; TRANSACT.—Ant.: commence, enter upon, found, inaugurate, initiate, institute, make a beginning, open, originate, set about, set out (upon), start, undertake. Compare INSTITUTE, v.

end, n. 1. The terminal point or part of any material object that has length. 2. The part of an object that is near either extremity. 3. The point in time at which some process ceases; hence, the conclusion of any work or operation. 4. The farthest limit of the space occupied by any extended object. 5. The purpose in view. 6. An inevitable or natural consequence. 7. The close of life. 8. A fragment. [< AS. ende.]

Syn.: accomplishment, achievement, bound, boundary, cessation, close, completion, conclusion, consequence, consummation, design, effect, expiration, extent, extremity, finale, finis, finish, fulfilment, goal, intent, issue, limit, outcome, period, point, purpose, result, termination, terminus, tip, utmost, uttermost. The end is the terminal part of a material object that has length; the extremity is distinctively the terminal point, and may thus be but part of the end in the general sense of that word; the extremity is viewed as that which is most remote from some center, or some mean or standard position; the southern end of South America includes all Patagonia, the southern extremity or point is Cape Horn. Tip has nearly the same meaning as extremity, but is said of small or slight and tapering objects; as, the tip of the finger; point in such connections is said of that which is drawn out to exceeding fineness or sharpness, as the point of a needle, a fork, or a sword; extremity is said of something considerable; we do not speak of the extremity of a needle. A goal is an end sought or striven for, as in a race. For the figurative senses of end and its associated words, compare the synonyms for the verb END; also for AIM; CONSEQUENCE; DESIGN; EVENT; PURPOSE; REASON; TERMINATION.—Ant.: see synonyms for BEGINNING.

en-deav'or, 1 en-dev'ər; 2 ĕn-dĕv'or, vt. & vi. To en-dev'ors, make an effort to do or effect; undertake; exert oneself to accomplish an object.

Syn.: attempt, essay, strive, try, undertake. To attempt is to take action somewhat experimentally with the hope and purpose of accomplishing a certain result; to endeavor is to attempt strenuously and with firm and enduring purpose. To attempt expresses a single act; to endeavor, a continuous exertion; we say I will endeavor (not I will attempt) while I live. To attempt is with the view of accomplishing; to essay with a view of testing our own powers. To undertake is to accept or take upon oneself as an obligation, as some business, labor, or trust; the word often implies complete assurance of success; as, I will undertake to produce the witness. To strive suggests little of the result, much of toil, strain, and contest, in seeking it; I will strive to fulfil your wishes, i. e., I will spare no labor and exertion to do it. Try is the most comprehensive of these words. The original idea of testing or experimenting is not thought of when a man says "I will try." To attempt suggests giving up, if the thing is not accomplished at a stroke; to try implies using other means and studying out other ways if not at first successful. Try is more earnest; endeavor is more mild and formal.—Ant.: abandon, dismiss, drop, give up, let go, neglect, omit, overlook, pass by, throw away, throw over, throw up.

—en-deav'or-er, n. One who endeavors; specifically, a member of a society of Christian Endeavor.—en-deav'ormentꝉ, n.

en-deav'or, } n. An attempt or effort to do or attain en-dev'ors, } something; earnest exertion for an end. [< EN-[1], + F. devoir, duty.] en-deav'ourꝉ.

Syn.: attempt, effort, essay, exertion, struggle, trial. Effort denotes the voluntary putting forth of power to attain or accomplish some specific thing; it reaches toward a definite end; exertion is a putting forth of power without special reference to an object. Every effort is an exertion, but not every exertion is an effort. Attempt is more experimental than effort, endeavor less strenuous but more continuous. An effort is a single act, an endeavor a continued series of acts; an endeavor is sustained and enduring, and may be lifelong; we do not have a society of Christian Attempt, or of Christian Effort, but of Christian Endeavor. A struggle is a violent effort or strenuous exertion. An essay is an attempt, effort, or endeavor made as a test of the powers of the one who makes it. See AIM; ATTEMPT. Compare ENDEAVOR, v.

en-due'[1], 1 en-dū'; 2 ĕn-dū', vt. [EN-DUED'; EN-DU'ING.] To invest, as with some quality or grace, usually spiritual. [Var. of ENDOW.]

en-due'[2], vt. [EN-DUED'; EN-DU'ING.] 1. To put on; assume. 2. To clothe; invest. [< L. induo, put on, clothe.]

en-dure', 1 en-dūr'; 2 ĕn-dūr', v. [EN-DURED'; EN-DUR'ING.] I. t. 1. To suffer or bear, as pain, sorrow, or destructive force, without injury or giving way; withstand. 2. To suffer patiently; tolerate. II. i. 1. To have duration; continue. 2. To be firm in trial. [< L.[F] in, in, + durus, hard.]

Syn.: abide, afford, allow, bear, bear up under, bear with, brook, permit, put up with, submit to, suffer, support, sustain, tolerate, undergo. Bear is the most general of these words; it is metaphorically to hold up or keep up a burden of care, pain, grief, annoyance, or the like, without sinking, lamenting, or repining. Allow and permit involve large concession of the will; put up with and tolerate imply decided aversion and reluctant withholding of opposition or interference; whispering is allowed by the school-teacher who does not forbid nor censure it; one puts up with the presence of a disagreeable visitor; a state tolerates a religion which it would be glad to suppress. To endure is to bear with strain and resistance, but with conscious power; endure conveys a fuller suggestion of contest and conquest than bear. One may choose to endure the pain of a surgical operation rather than take anesthetics; he permits the thing to come which he must brace himself to endure when it comes. To afford is to be equal to a pecuniary demand, i. e., to be able to bear it. To brook is quietly to put up with provocation or insult. Abide combines the senses of await and endure; as, I will abide the result. Compare ABIDE; LIVE; PERSEVERE; PERSIST; STAND; SUPPORT.—Ant.: break, break down, despair, droop, fail, faint, fall, falter, give out, give up, sink, succumb, surrender, yield.

—en-dur'a-bl(eF), a. That may be endured; bearable.—en-dur'ance, n. 1. The power to endure; fortitude; durability. 2. Continuation in time; duration Syn.: see FORTITUDE; PATIENCE.—en-dur'ing, pa. Having or showing endurance; lasting; long-suffering or long-continuing. en'e-my, 1 en'ı-mı; 2 ĕn'e-my, n. [-MIES[2], pl.] 1. One who cherishes resentment or malicious purpose toward another; an adversary; foe. 2. One of a hostile army or nation; a hostile nation or military force collectively. [< L.[OF] inimicus, < in, not, + amicus, friend.]

Syn.: adversary, antagonist, competitor, foe, opponent, rival. An enemy in private life is one who is moved by hostile feeling with active disposition to injure; but in military language all who fight on the opposite side are called enemies or collectively "the enemy," where no personal animosity may be implied; foe, which is rather a poetical and literary word, implies intensely hostile spirit and purpose. An antagonist is one who opposes and is opposed actively and with intensity of effort; an opponent, one in whom the attitude of resistance is the more prominent; a competitor, one who seeks the same object for which another is striving; antagonists in wrestling, competitors in business, opponents in debate may contend with no personal ill will; rivals in love, ambition, etc., rarely avoid inimical feeling. Adversary now commonly denotes one who not only opposes another in fact, but does so with hostile spirit, or perhaps out of pure malignity. Compare synonyms for AMBITION.—Ant.: abettor, accessory, accomplice, ally, friend, helper, supporter.

en"ter-tain', 1 en"tər-tēn'; 2 ĕn"tĕr-tān', v. I. t. 1. To receive and care for, as a guest. 2. To afford amusement to; divert. 3. To take into consideration; hold in mind, as an opinion. 4‖. To keep up; maintain; hold. 5†. To while away; occupy pleasantly. II. i. To receive and care for guests. [< L.^{F} inter, among, + teneo, hold.]

Syn.: amuse, beguile, cheer, delight, disport, divert, enliven, gratify, interest, occupy, please, recreate. To entertain, in the sense here considered, is to engage and pleasantly occupy the attention; to amuse is to occupy the attention in an especially bright and cheerful way, often with that which excites merriment or laughter; as, he entertained us with an amusing story. To divert is to turn from serious thoughts or laborious pursuits to something that lightly and agreeably occupies the mind; one may be entertained or amused who has nothing serious or laborious from which to be diverted. To recreate, literally to re-create, is to engage mind or body in some pleasing activity that restores strength and energy for serious work. To beguile is, as it were, to cheat into cheer and comfort by something that insensibly draws thought or feeling away from pain or disquiet. We beguile a weary hour, cheer the despondent, divert the preoccupied, enliven a dull evening or company, gratify our friends' wishes, entertain, interest, please a listening audience, occupy idle time, disport ourselves when merry, recreate when worn with toil; we amuse ourselves or others with whatever pleasantly passes the time without special exertion, each according to his taste. See ACCOMMODATE; AMUSE; CHERISH; INTEREST.—Ant.: annoy, bore, busy, disquiet, distract, disturb, tire, weary.

en"ter-tain'ment, 1 en"tər-tēn'mənt or -ment; 2 ĕn"tĕr-tān'ment, n. 1. Hospitable accommodation; hospitality. 2. A diverting performance; amusement. 3. The act of entertaining in the mind, as a proposal.

Syn.: amusement, cheer, delight, diversion, enjoyment, frolic, fun, merriment, pastime, pleasure, recreation, sport. Entertainment and recreation imply thought and mental occupation, tho in an agreeable, refreshing way; they are therefore words of a high order. Entertainment is used of somewhat mirthful mental delight; recreation may, and usually does, combine the mental with the physical. Amusement and pastime are nearly equivalent, the latter probably the lighter word; many slight things may be pastimes which we should hardly dignify by the name of amusements. Sports are almost wholly on the physical plane, tho involving a certain grade of mental action, fox-hunting, horse-racing, baseball, etc. Cheer may be very quiet, as the cheer of a bright fire to an aged traveler; merriment is with liveliness and laughter; fun and frolic are apt to be boisterous. Compare ENTERTAIN; FROLIC; SPORT.—Ant.: ennui, fatigue, labor, lassitude, toil, weariness, work.

en"thel-min'tha, 1 en"thel-min'thə; 2 ĕn"thĕl-mĭn'tha, n. pl. Worm-like entozoans. [< ENT- (see ENTO-) + Gr. helmin(th-)s, worm.] en"thel-min'thes‡.—en"thel-min'thic, a.

en-thu'si-asm, 1 en-thiü'zi-azm; 2 ĕn-thū'ṣi-ăṣm, n. 1. Earnest and fervent feeling; ardent zeal for a person or cause. 2‖. Irrational religious ecstasy. [< Gr. enthousiasmos, < en, in, + theos, god.]

Syn.: ardor, devotion, eagerness, earnestness, ecstasy, excitement, extravagance, fanaticism, fervency, fervor, frenzy, inspiration, intensity, passion, rapture, transport, vehemence, warmth, zeal. The old meaning of enthusiasm implies a pseudo-inspiration, an almost frantic extravagance in behalf of something supposed to be an expression of the divine will. This sense remains as the controlling one in the kindred noun enthusiast. Enthusiasm has now chiefly the meaning of an earnest and commendable devotion, an intense and eager interest. Against the hindrances of the world, nothing great and good can be carried without a certain fervor, intensity, and vehemence; these joined with faith, courage, and hopefulness make enthusiasm. Zeal is burning earnestness, always tending to vigorous action with all the devotion of enthusiasm, tho often without its hopefulness. Compare EAGER; WARMTH.—Ant.: calculation, calmness, caution, coldness, deadness, dulness, indifference, lukewarmness, policy, prudence, timidity, wariness.

—en-thu'si-ast, n. One prone to or moved by enthusiasm; an ardent adherent; zealot.—en-thu"si-as'tic, a. Given to enthusiasm; ardent; zealous. en-thu"si-as'ti-cal‡. Syn.: see EAGER; SANGUINE.—en-thu"si-as'ti-cal-ly, adv.

Syn.: ambiguous, doubtful, dubious, enigmatic, enigmatical, indefinite, indeterminate, indistinct, obscure, perplexing, questionable, suspicious, uncertain. Ambiguous is applied only to spoken or written statements; equivocal has other applications. A statement is ambiguous when it leaves the mind of the reader or hearer to fluctuate between two meanings, which would fit the language equally well; it is equivocal when it would naturally be understood in one way, but is capable of a different interpretation; an equivocal expression is, as a rule, intentionally deceptive, while an ambiguous utterance may be simply the result of a want either of clear thought or of adequate expression. That which is enigmatical must be guessed like a riddle. That is doubtful which is fairly open to doubt; that is dubious which has become the subject of doubts so grave as scarcely to fall short of condemnation; as, a dubious reputation. Questionable may be used nearly in the sense either of dubious or of doubtful; a questionable statement is one that must be proved before it can be accepted. A suspicious character gives reason to be suspected; a suspicious temper is inclined to suspect the others, with or without reason. Compare CLEAR; PRECARIOUS.—Ant.: certain, clear, distinct, evident, indisputable, indubitable, lucid, manifest, obvious, perspicuous, plain, unambiguous, unequivocal, unquestionable, unquestioned.

Syn.: appreciate, calculate, consider, deem, estimate, hold, prize, regard, think, value. Esteem and estimate alike imply to set a certain mental value upon, but esteem is less precise and mercantile than calculate or estimate. We esteem a jewel precious; we estimate it to be worth so much money. In popular usage esteem, as said of persons, denotes a union of respect and kindly feeling and, in the highest sense, of moral approbation; as, one whom I highly esteem. To appreciate anything is to be deeply or keenly sensible of or sensitive to its qualities or influence; as, to appreciate beauty or harmony; to appreciate one's services. To prize is to set a high value on for something more than merely commercial reasons. To regard (F. regarder, look at, observe) is to have a certain mental view favorable or unfavorable; as, I regard him as a friend; or, I regard him as a villain; regard has a distinctively favorable sense as applied to institutions, proprieties, duties, etc., but does not share the use of the noun regard as applied to persons; we regard the Sabbath; we regard a person's feelings; we have a regard for the person. See ADMIRE; APPRECIATE; LIKE. Compare ESTEEM, n.—Ant.: see synonyms for ABHOR.

es-teem', n. 1. Favorable opinion, as that based on moral worth. 2. Character that commands respect.

Syn.: estimate, estimation, favor, regard, respect. Esteem for a person is a favorable opinion on the basis of worth, especially of moral worth, joined with a feeling of interest in and attraction toward the person. Regard for a person is the mental view or feeling that springs from a sense of his excellence, with a cordial and hearty friendliness. Regard is more personal and less distant than esteem, and adds a special kindliness; respect is a more distant word than esteem. Respect may be wholly on one side, while regard is commonly mutual; respect in the fullest sense is given to what is lofty, worthy, and honorable, or to a person of such qualities; but we may pay respect to station or office, regardless of the person holding it. Estimate has more of calculation; as, my estimate of the man, or of his abilities, is very high. Estimation involves the idea of calculation or appraisal with that of esteem or regard, and is especially used of the feeling entertained by numbers of people; as, he stood high in public estimation. Compare ESTEEM, v.; ATTACHMENT; FRIENDSHIP; LOVE; REGARD.—Ant.: abhorrence, antipathy, aversion, contempt, dislike, hatred, loathing, repugnance.

Syn.: case, chance, circumstance, consequence, contingency, end, episode, fact, fortune, incident, issue, occurrence, outcome, possibility, result, sequel. Etymologically, the incident is that which falls in, the event that which comes out; event is thus greater and more signal than incident; we speak of trifling incidents, great events; incidents of daily life, events of history. Circumstance agrees with incident in denoting a matter of relatively slight importance, but implies a more direct connection with the principal matter as indicated in the phrase "circumstantial evidence." An occurrence is, etymologically, that which we run against, without thought of its origin, connection, or tendency. An episode is connected with the main course of events, like an incident or circumstance, but is of more independent interest and importance. Outcome is the Saxon, and event the Latin for expressing the same original idea. Consequence and result express more of logical connection, and are more comprehensive. The end may be simple cessation; the event is what has been accomplished; the event of a war is victory or defeat; the end of the war is reached when a treaty of peace is signed. Since the future is contingent, event comes to have the meaning of a contingency; as, in the event of his death, the policy will at once fall due. Compare CIRCUMSTANCE; CONSEQUENCE; END.

eve'ry, 1 ev'rı; 2 ĕv'ry. I. a. 1. Each, as of an aggregate of individuals; all taken one by one. 2. All possible. II. pron. Legal. Every one; each. [< AS. æfre (see EVER) + ælc; see EACH.]

Syn.: all, any, both, each, either. All and both are collective; any, each, and every are distributive. Any makes no selection and may not reach to the full limits of all: each and every make no exception or omission, and must extend to all; all sweeps in the units as part of a total, each and every proceed through the units to the total. A promise made to all omits none; a promise made to any may not reach all; a promise made to every one is so made that no individual shall fail to be aware of it; a promise made to each is made to the individuals personally, one by one. Each is thus more individual and specific than every; every classifies, each individualizes. Each divides, both unites; if a certain sum is given to each of two persons, both (together) must receive twice the amount; both must be aware of what has been separately communicated to each; a man may fire both barrels of a gun by a single movement; if he fires each barrel, he discharges them separately. Either commonly denotes one of two, indefinitely, to the exclusion of the other; either is also in good, tho somewhat archaic, use, in the sense of each or both of two, taken separately and indifferently; as, on either side of the river. There was a huge fireplace at either end of the hall. SCOTT Ivanhoe. iii.

—eve'ry-bod"y, n. Every person; people in general.—eve'ry-day", a. Suitable for every day; ordinary; usual. [< L. evidentia, clearness.] Syn.: see CERTAINTY; DEMONSTRATION; PROOF; TESTIMONY.

ev'i-dent, 1 ev'ı-dent; 2 ĕv'i-dĕnt, a. Plain or manifest, as to the mind or the senses; obvious. -ly, adv.

Syn.: apparent, clear, conspicuous, discernible, distinct, glaring, indubitable, manifest, obvious, open, overt, palpable, patent, perceptible, plain, tangible, transparent, unmistakable, visible. That is apparent which clearly appears to the senses or to the mind as soon as the attention is directed toward it; that is evident of which the mind is made sure by some inference that supplements the facts of perception; the marks of a struggle were apparent in broken shrubbery and trampled ground, and the finding of a mutilated body and a rifled purse made it evident that robbery and murder had been committed. That is manifest which we can lay the hand upon; manifest is thus stronger than evident, as touch is more absolute than sight. That is obvious which is directly in the way so that it can not be missed; as, the application of the remark was obvious. Visible applies to all that can be perceived by the sense of sight, whether the noonday sun, a ship on the horizon, or a microscopic object. Discernible applies to that which is dimly or faintly visible, requiring strain and effort in order to be seen; as, the ship was discernible through the mist. That is conspicuous which stands out so as necessarily or strikingly to attract the attention. Palpable and tangible express more emphatically the thought of manifest. See APPARENT; CLEAR; MANIFEST; NOTORIOUS.—Ant.: concealed, covert, dark, hidden, impalpable, impenetrable, imperceptible, invisible, latent, obscure, occult, secret, undiscovered, unimagined, unknown, unseen, unthought of.

ex-am′pl(eP, 1 egz-amˊpl; 2 ĕgz-ămˊpl, n. 1. A thing or person suitable to be used as a copy. 2. An instance of something to be avoided. 3. A sample; specimen. 4. An instance serving to illustrate a rule. 5. A problem to be solved. 6. That with which something may be compared; precedent; parallel. [< L.^{OF} exemplum, < ex, out, + emptus, pp. of emo, buy.]

Syn.: archetype, ensample, exemplar, exemplification, ideal, model, pattern, precedent, prototype, sample, specimen, standard, type, warning. From its original sense of sample or specimen (L. exemplum) example derives the seemingly contradictory meanings, on the one hand of a pattern or model, and on the other hand of a warning—a sample or specimen of what is to be followed, or of what is to be shunned. An example, however, may be more than a sample or specimen of any class; it may be the very archetype or prototype to which the whole class must conform, as when Christ is spoken of as being an example or leaving an example for his disciples. Example comes nearer to the possible freedom of the model than to the necessary exactness of the pattern; often we can not, in a given case, exactly imitate the best example, but only adapt its teachings to altered circumstances. In its application to a person or thing, exemplar can scarcely be distinguished from example; but example is most frequently used for an act, or course of action, for which exemplar is not used; as, one sets a good (or a bad) example. An exemplification is an illustrative working out in action of a principle or law, without any reference to its being copied or repeated: an example guides, an exemplification illustrates or explains. Ensample is the same as example, but is practically obsolete outside of Scriptural or theological language. Compare ARCHETYPE; MODEL; PRECEDENT; SAMPLE.

ex-cess', 1 ek-ses'; 2 ĕk-çĕs', n. 1. That which passes the ordinary, reasonable, or required limit. 2. Inordinate gratification of appetite. 3. The amount by which one thing is greater than another; overplus. [< L.[p] excessus, < excedo; see EXCEED.]

Syn.: dissipation, exorbitance, extravagance, intemperance, lavishness, overplus, prodigality, profusion, redundance, redundancy, superabundance, superfluity, surplus, waste, wastefulness. Excess is more than enough of anything, and, since this in very many cases indicates a lack either of judgment or of self-control, the word is used frequently, tho not necessarily, in an unfavorable sense. Careless expenditure in excess of income is extravagance; we may have also extravagance of language, professions, etc. As extravagance is excess in outlay, exorbitance is excess in demands, and especially in pecuniary demands upon others. Overplus and superabundance denote in the main a satisfactory and superfluity an undesirable excess; lavishness and profusion, a generous, bountiful, or amiable excess; as, a profusion of fair hair; lavishness of hospitality. Surplus is neutral, having none of the unfavorable meaning that often attaches to excess; a surplus is that which remains over after all demands are met. Redundance or redundancy refers chiefly to literary style, denoting an excess of words or matter. Excess in the moral sense is expressed by dissipation, prodigality, intemperance, etc.—Ant.: dearth, defect, deficiency, destitution, economy, failure, frugality, inadequacy, insufficiency, lack, need, poverty, scantiness, shortcoming, want.

excl., exclam., abbr. Exclamation, exclamatory.

ex-claim', 1 eks-klēm'; 2 ĕks-clām', vt. & vi. To cry out abruptly or with passion. [< L. ex, out, + clamo, cry.]

Syn.: call, cry out, ejaculate. In exclaiming, the utterance may not be strikingly, tho somewhat, above the ordinary tone and pitch; we may exclaim by mere interjections, or by connected words. To ejaculate is to throw out brief, disconnected, but coherent utterances of joy, regret, and especially of appeal, petition, prayer; the use of such devotional utterances has received the special name of "ejaculatory prayer." To cry out is to give forth a louder and more excited utterance than in exclaiming; one often exclaims with sudden joy as well as sorrow; if he cries out, it is oftener in grief or agony. See CALL.

Syn.: annihilate, banish, demolish, destroy, eradicate, expel, extirpate, overthrow, remove, root out, uproot, wipe out. The word exterminate is applied to races of men or animals; individuals are said to be banished, expelled, destroyed, etc. Eradicate is primarily applied to numbers or groups of plants; a single tree may be uprooted, but is not said to be eradicated. To extirpate is to destroy the very stock, so that the race can never be restored; we speak of eradicating a disease, of extirpating a cancer, exterminating wild beasts or hostile tribes; we seek to eradicate or extirpate vice. See ABOLISH.—Ant.: augment, beget, build up, cherish, colonize, develop, foster, increase, plant, populate, propagate, replenish, settle.

faith†, vt. To believe; give credence to; credit.

faith, 1 fēth; 2 fāth, n. 1. A firm conviction of the truth of what is declared by another, simply on the ground of his truth or faithfulness; belief; trust; especially, such belief and trust exercised toward God and Christ. 2. Intellectual conviction in general, however grounded. 3. That which is believed; a religious creed or article of belief. 4. An obligation to fidelity, whether expressed or implied; also, the observance of this obligation; good faith; fidelity. [< L.[OF] fides, faith.]

Syn.: assent, assurance, belief, confidence, conviction, credence, credit, creed, doctrine, opinion, reliance, trust. Belief, as an intellectual process, is the acceptance of something as true on other grounds than personal observation and experience. We give credence to a report, assent to a proposition or to a proposal. Belief is stronger than credence; credence might be described as a prima facie belief; credence is a more formal word than belief, and seems to imply somewhat more of volition; we speak of giving credence to a report, but not of giving belief. Goods are sold on credit; we give one credit for good intentions. Conviction is a belief established by argument or evidence; assurance is belief beyond the reach of argument; as, the Christian's assurance of salvation. Faith is a union of belief and trust. Faith is chiefly personal; belief may be quite impersonal; we speak of belief of a proposition, faith in a promise, because the promise emanates from a person. But belief in a person is often used with no appreciable difference from faith. In religion it is common to distinguish between intellectual belief of religious truth, as any other truth might be believed, and belief of the heart, or saving faith. Compare FIDELITY; OPINION; RELIGION; TRUST. —Ant.: denial, disbelief, dissent, distrust, doubt, incredulity, infidelity, misgiving, rejection, skepticism, suspicion, unbelief.—Prep.: commonly in. [IN FAITH.]

Syn.: bigotry, credulity, intolerance, superstition. Fanaticism is extravagant or even frenzied zeal; bigotry is obstinate and unreasoning attachment to a cause or creed; fanaticism and bigotry usually include intolerance, which is unwillingness to tolerate beliefs or opinions contrary to one's own; superstition is ignorant and irrational religious belief. Credulity is not distinctively religious, but is a general readiness to believe without sufficient evidence, with a proneness to accept the marvelous. Bigotry is narrow, fanaticism is fierce, superstition is ignorant, credulity is weak, intolerance is severe. Bigotry has not the capacity to reason fairly, fanaticism has not the patience, superstition has not the knowledge and mental discipline, intolerance has not the disposition. Bigotry, fanaticism, and superstition are perversions of the religious sentiment; credulity and intolerance often accompany skepticism or atheism. Compare ENTHUSIASM; FRENZY.—Ant.: cynicism, free-thinking, indifference, latitudinarianism.

fan'ci-er, 1 fan'si-ər; 2 făn'çi-er, n. 1. A breeder and seller of birds or animals; one having a taste for special objects; an amateur. 2. A dreamer.

fan'ci-ful, 1 fan'si-ful; 2 făn'çi-fụl, a. 1. Proceeding from or produced by fancy; ideal; odd. 2. Existing only in the fancy; unreal; visionary. 3. Whimsical.
Syn.: chimerical, fantastic, grotesque, imaginative, visionary. That is fanciful which is dictated or suggested by fancy independently of more serious considerations; the fantastic is the fanciful with the added elements of whimsicalness and extravagance. The fanciful swings away from the real or the ordinary lightly and pleasantly, the fantastic extravagantly, the grotesque ridiculously. A fanciful arrangement of objects is commonly pleasing, a fantastic arrangement is striking, a grotesque arrangement is laughable. A fanciful theory or suggestion may be clearly recognized as such; a visionary scheme is erroneously supposed to have a basis in fact. Compare synonyms for DREAM; IDEA; IDEAL; IMAGINARY; IMAGINATION; ROMANTIC.—Ant.: accurate, calculable, calculated, commonplace, literal, ordinary, prosaic, real, reasonable, regular, sensible, solid, sound, sure, true.

fan'cy, 1 fan'si; 2 făn'çy. I. vt. & vi. [FAN'CIED; FAN'CYING.] 1. To suppose or believe without substantial grounds. 2. To take a fancy to; take pleasure in. 3. To conceive in the fancy; have a notion; form a fancy. 4†. To love. Syn.: see GUESS; LIKE.
II. a. Adapted to, proceeding from, or characterized by fancy, in any sense of the noun. III. n. [FAN'CIES[z], pl.] 1. The power or act of forming or combining mental images with little regard to rational processes; imagination in its lower forms; fantasy. 2. A visionary or whimsical notion; vagary. 3. A liking or fondness; also, the object liked: followed by for. 4. A pet pursuit; a hobby; fad. 5†. Fantasticalness. [< Gr.[F] phantasia, < phainō, show.]
Syn.: belief, caprice, conceit, conception, desire, humor, idea, image, imagination, inclination, liking, mood, prediliction, supposition, vagary, whim. An intellectual fancy is a mental image or picture founded upon slight or whimsical association or resemblance; a conceit has less of the picturesque and more of the theoretic than a fancy; a conceit is somewhat aside from the common laws of reasoning, as a fancy is lighter and more airy than the common mode of thought. A conceit or fancy may be wholly unfounded, while a conception always has, or is believed to have, some answering reality. (Compare REASON.) An intellectual fancy or conceit may be pleasing or amusing, but is never worth serious discussion; we speak of a mere fancy, a droll or odd conceit. An emotional or personal fancy is a capricious liking formed with slight reason and no exercise of judgment, and liable to fade as lightly as it was formed. In a broader sense, the fancy signifies the faculty by which fancies or mental images are formed, associated, or combined. Compare synonyms for DREAM; IDEA; IMAGINATION; INCLINATION; THOUGHT; WHIM.—Ant.: actuality, certainty, fact, reality, truth, verity.—Prep.: to have a fancy for or take a fancy to a person or thing.

fear, 1 fir; 2 fēr. I. vt. & vi. 1. To be apprehensive or afraid of; be fearful or afraid; venerate; revere. 2. [Poet. & Archaic.] To terrify; drive by fear. II. n. 1. An emotion excited by threatening or apprehended evil; alarm; dread; terror. 2. A cause of fear. 3. Reverence for constituted authority; religious awe; as, the fear of God. [< AS. fær, sudden danger, fear.]

Syn.: affright, apprehension, awe, consternation, dismay, disquietude, dread, fright, horror, misgiving, panic, terror, timidity, trembling, tremor, trepidation. Fear is the generic term denoting an emotion excited by threatening evil with a desire to avoid or escape it; fear may be sudden or lingering, in view of present, of imminent, or of distant and only possible danger; in the latter sense dread is oftener used. Horror (etymologically a shivering or shuddering) denotes a shuddering fear accompanied with abhorrence or such a shock to the feelings and sensibilities as may exist without fear, as when one suddenly encounters some ghastly spectacle; we say of a desperate but fettered criminal, "I looked upon him with horror." Where horror includes fear, it is fear mingled with abhorrence. (See ABHOR.) Timidity is a quality, habit, or condition, a readiness to be affected with fear. A person of great timidity is constantly liable to needless alarm and even terror. Dread is terrifying anticipation of evil, and is lingering and oppressive. Dismay is a helpless sinking of heart in view of some overwhelming peril or sorrow, actual or prospective. Dismay is more reflective, enduring, and despairing than fright; a horse is subject to fright or terror, but not to dismay. Awe is a reverential fear. Compare ALARM; ANXIETY; FRIGHT.—Ant.: See synonyms for FORTITUDE. Compare BRAVE.

feud[1], 1 fūd; 2 fūd, n. Vindictive strife or hostility between families or clans, commonly hereditary. [< AS. fǽhth, < fāh, hostile.]

Syn.: animosity, bitterness, contention, contest, controversy, dispute, dissension, enmity, hostility, quarrel, strife. A feud is enmity between families, clans, or parties, with acts of hostility mutually retaliated and avenged; feud is rarely used of individuals, never of nations. While all the other words of the group may refer to that which is transient, a feud is long-enduring, and often hereditary. Dissension is used of a number of persons, of a party or other organization. Bitterness is in feeling only; enmity and hostility involve will and purpose to oppose or injure. Compare QUARREL.

Syn.: allegory, apolog, fable, fabrication, falsehood, figment, invention, legend, myth, novel, romance, story. Fiction is now chiefly used of a prose work in narrative form in which the characters are partly or wholly imaginary, and which is designed to portray human life, with or without a practical lesson; a romance portrays what is picturesque or striking, as a mere fiction may not do; novel is a general name for any continuous fictitious narrative, especially a love-story; fiction and novel are used with little difference of meaning, except that novel characterizes a work in which the emotional element is especially prominent. The moral of the fable is expressed formally; the lesson of the fiction, if any, is inwrought. A fiction is studied; a myth grows up without intent. A legend may be true, but can not be historically verified; a myth has been received as true at some time, but is now known to be false. A fabrication is designed to deceive; it is a less odious word than falsehood, but is really stronger, as a falsehood may be a sudden unpremeditated statement, while a fabrication is a series of statements carefully studied and fitted together in order to deceive; the falsehood is all false; the fabrication may mingle the true with the false. A figment is something imaginary which the one who utters it may or may not believe to be true; we say, "That statement is a figment of his imagination." The story may be either true or false, and covers the various senses of all the words in the group. Apolog, a word simply transferred from Greek into English, is the same as fable. Compare ALLEGORY.—Ant.: certainty, fact, history, literalness, reality, truth, verity.

Syn.: ferocious, fiery, furious, impetuous, raging, savage, uncultivated, untrained, violent, wild. Fierce signifies having a furious and cruel nature, or being in a furious and cruel mood, more commonly the latter. It applies to that which is now intensely excited, or liable to intense and sudden excitement. Ferocious refers to a state or disposition; that which is fierce flashes or blazes; that which is ferocious steadily burns; we speak of a ferocious animal, a fierce passion. A fiery spirit with a good disposition is quickly excitable in a good cause, but may not be fierce or ferocious. Savage signifies untrained, uncultivated. Ferocious always denotes a tendency to violence; it is more distinctly bloodthirsty than the other words; a person may be deeply, intensely cruel, and not at all ferocious; a ferocious countenance expresses habitual ferocity; a fierce countenance may express habitual fierceness, or only the sudden anger of the moment. That which is wild is simply unrestrained; the word may imply no anger or harshness; as, wild delight, wild alarm. See ARDENT; GRIM. — Ant.: affectionate, docile, gentle, harmless, kind, mild, patient, peaceful, submissive, sweet, tame, tender.

fin de siè'cle, 1 fañ də syā'kl; 2 făn de syē'el. Literally, end of the century; befitting the close of the 19th century; up to date. [F.] [mulct.

fine[1], 1 fain; 2 fīn, vt. [FINED; FIN'ING.] To punish by fine; fine[2]. I. t. To refine. II. i. 1. To become purified, thin, or slender: with down. 2. To melt or fade gradually. [< FINE, a.]—fin'er, n. A refiner.

fine, a. [FIN'ER; FIN'EST.] 1. Excellent in quality; admirable; beautiful; elegant. 2. Suggesting lightness; light or delicate; not coarse, gross, or dull; subtile; thin; keen. 3. Showy in appearance or style; pretentious; ostentatious. 4. Delicate of perception; refined; sensitive; nice. 5. Refined, as sirup; pure. 6. Distinguished or noteworthy. 7. Enjoyable; pleasant. [< F. fin, < L. finio, finish.]

Syn.: beautiful, clarified, clear, comminuted, dainty, delicate, elegant, excellent, exquisite, gauzy, handsome, keen, minute, nice, polished, pure, refined, sensitive, sharp, slender, slight, small, smooth, splendid, subtile, subtle, tenuous, thin. Fine (L. finis, end) denotes that which has been brought to a full end, finished. From this root-sense many derived meanings branch out, causing words quite remote from each other to be alike synonyms of fine. That which is truly finished, brought to an ideal end, is excellent of its kind, and beautiful, if a thing that admits of beauty; as, a fine house, fine trees, a fine woman, a fine morning; if a thing that admits of the removal of impurities, it is not finished till these are removed, and hence fine signifies clarified, clear, pure, refined; as, fine gold. That which is finished is apt to be polished, smooth to the touch, minutely exact in outline; hence fine comes to be a synonym for all words like dainty, delicate, exquisite; as, fine manners, a fine touch, fine perceptions. As that which is delicate is apt to be small, by an easy extension of meaning fine becomes a synonym for slender, slight, minute, comminuted; as, a fine thread, fine sand; or for filmy, tenuous, thin; as, a fine lace, fine wire; and as a thin edge is keen, sharp, fine becomes also a synonym for these words; as, a fine point, a fine edge. Compare BEAUTIFUL; EXCELLENT; MINUTE; TASTEFUL.—Ant.: big, blunt, clumsy, coarse, great, heavy, huge, immense, large, rude, stout, thick.

fin'ish[1], 1 fin'iṡh; 2 fin'ish, v. I. t. To complete or bring to an end; perfect finally or in detail. II. i. To reach or come to an end; cease. [< L.[OF] finio, < finis; see FINE, a.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, bring to an end, close, complete, conclude, elaborate, end, get done, perfect, polish, put an end to, terminate. In addition to its meaning of bringing to an end, by which it is synonymous with close, complete, conclude, end, terminate, etc., finish has come to denote the bringing to perfection of every minutest detail, especially of superficial elegance, refinement, or beauty, and is thus a close synonym of elaborate, perfect, polish, etc., as in the expression "to add the finishing touches." Compare END, v. — Ant.: commence, enter upon, found, inaugurate, initiate, institute, make a beginning, open, originate, set about, start, undertake. Compare synonyms for BEGINNING.

—fin'ished, pa. Carried to a high degree of perfection; complete; polished. Syn.: see PERFECT; RIPE.—fin'ish-er, n.

for'tu-nate, 1 fôr'chu-[or -tiu-]nıt; 2 fôr'chu-[or -tū-]nat, a. 1. Happening by a favorable chance; lucky. 2. Favored with good fortune.

Syn.: favored, happy, lucky, prospered, prosperous, successful. A man is successful in any case if he achieves or gains what he seeks; he is known as a successful man if he has achieved or gained worthy objects of endeavor; he is fortunate or lucky if advantages have come to him without or beyond his direct planning or achieving. Lucky is the more common and colloquial, fortunate the more elegant word; fortunate is more naturally applied to the graver matters, as we speak of the fortunate, rather than the lucky, issue of a great battle; lucky more strongly emphasizes the element of chance, as when we speak of a lucky hit, a lucky guess, or of one as "born under a lucky star." Favored is used in a religious sense, implying that one is the object of divine favor. Happy, in this connection, signifies possessed of the means of happiness. One is said to be happy or prosperous whether his prosperity be the result of fortune or of achievement; prospered rather denotes the action of a superintending Providence. See AUSPICIOUS; HAPPY.—Ant.: broken, crushed, fallen, ill-starred, miserable, unfortunate, unhappy, unlucky, woful, wretched.

friend′ly, 1 frend′li; 2 frĕnd′ly, a. 1. Pertaining to or like a friend; befitting friendship. 2. Propitious; favorable.

Syn.: accessible, affable, affectionate, amicable, brotherly, companionable, complaisant, cordial, favorable, fond, genial, hearty, kind, kindly, loving, neighborly, sociable, social, tender, well-disposed. Friendly, as said of persons, signifies having the disposition of a friend: as said of acts, it signifies befitting or worthy of a friend. The adjective friendly does not reach the full significance of the nouns "friend" and "friendship"; one may be friendly to those who are not his friends, and to be in friendly relations often signifies little more than not to be hostile. Affable and accessible are distinctively used of public and eminent persons, who might, if disposed, hold themselves at a distance from others. Companionable and sociable refer to manner and behavior, cordial and genial express genuine kindliness of heart and warmth of feeling. We speak of a cordial greeting, a favorable reception, a neighborly call, a sociable visitor, an amicable settlement, a kind interest, a friendly regard, a hearty welcome. The Saxon friendly is stronger than the Latin amicable. Fond is commonly applied to an affection that becomes, or at least appears, excessive. Affectionate, devoted, and tender are almost always used in a high and good sense; as, an affectionate son; a devoted friend; "the tender mercy of our God," Luke i, 78. See AMICABLE: GOOD; PROPITIOUS. Compare FRIENDSHIP.—Ant.: adverse, alienated, antagonistic, bellicose, belligerent, cold, contentious, disaffected, distant, estranged, frigid, hostile, ill-disposed, indifferent, inimical, unfriendly, unkind, warlike.

—friend′li-ly, adv. friend′ly‡.—friend′li-ness, n.—friend′ship, n. 1. Mutual regard cherished by kindred minds. 2. The state or fact of being friends. 3‖. An act of friendly assistance; aid; relief.

Syn.: affection, amity, attachment, comity, consideration, devotion, esteem, favor, friendliness, good will, love, regard. Friendship is a deep, quiet, enduring affection, founded upon mutual respect and esteem. Friendship is always mutual; one may have friendly feelings toward an enemy, but while there is hostility or coldness on one side there can not be friendship between the two. Friendliness is a quality of friendly feeling, without the deep and settled attachment implied in the state of friendship. Comity is mutual kindly courtesy, with care of each other's right, and amity a friendly feeling and relation, not necessarily implying special friendliness; as, the comity of nations, or amity between neighboring countries. Affection may be purely natural; friendship is a growth. Friendship is more intellectual and less emotional than love; friendship is easier to give reasons for friendship than for love; friendship is more calm and quiet, love more fervent, often rising to intensest passion; friendship implies some degree of equality, while love does not; one may have love for an inferior or an enemy. Compare ACQUAINTANCE; ASSOCIATION; ATTACHMENT; LOVE.—Ant.: see synonyms for BATTLE; ENMITY; FEUD; HATRED.—Prep.: the friendship of one person for or toward another, or the friendship between them.

II. n. 1. Sudden and violent alarm or fear.

2. Anything ugly, ridiculous, or shocking. [< AS. fyrhtu.]

Syn.: affright, dismay, dread, fear, horror, panic, terror. Affright, fright, and terror are always sudden, and in actual presence of that which is terrible; fear may be controlled by force of will; fright and terror overwhelm the will; terror paralyzes; fright may cause wild or desperate action. Fright is largely a matter of the nerves; fear of the intellect and the imagination; terror of all the faculties, bodily and mental. Panic is a sudden fear or fright, affecting numbers at once; vast armies or crowded audiences are liable to panic upon slight occasion. In a like sense we speak of a financial panic. Compare ALARM; FEAR.

—fright'en, vt. To alarm suddenly; scare.

Syn.: affright, alarm, appal, browbeat, cow, daunt, dismay, intimidate, scare, terrify. One is frightened by a cause of fear addressed directly and suddenly to the senses; he is intimidated by an apprehension of contingent consequences dependent on some act of his own to be done or forborne; the means of intimidation may act through the senses, or may appeal only to the intellect or the sensibilities. The sudden rush of an armed madman may frighten; the quiet leveling of a highwayman's pistol intimidates. A savage beast is intimidated by the keeper's whip. Employers may intimidate their employees from voting contrary to their will by threat of discharge; a mother may be intimidated through fear for her child. To browbeat or cow is to bring into a state of submissive fear; to daunt is to give pause or check to a violent, threatening, or even a brave spirit. To scare is to cause sudden, unnerving fear; to terrify is to awaken fear that is overwhelming. To appal (literally to make pale) is to overcome momentarily by some staggering or chilling fear or shocked repugnance; to dismay (literally to deprive of power) is to cause a sinking fear, make faint with dread or terror. Compare ALARM; FRIGHT.

Syn.: economy, miserliness, parsimoniousness, parsimony, providence, prudence, saving, scrimping, sparing, thrift. Economy is a wise and careful administration of the means at one's disposal; frugality is a withholding of expenditure, or sparing of supplies or provision, to a noticeable and often to a painful degree; parsimony is excessive and unreasonable saving for the sake of saving. Frugality exalted into a virtue to be practised for its own sake, instead of as a means to an end, becomes the vice of parsimony. Miserliness is the denying oneself and others the ordinary comforts or even necessaries of life, for the mere sake of hoarding money. Prudence and providence look far ahead, and sacrifice the present to the future, saving as much as may be necessary for that end. (See PRUDENCE.) Thrift seeks not merely to save, but to earn. Economy manages, frugality saves, providence plans, thrift at once earns and saves, with a view to wholesome and profitable expenditure at a fitting time. fruit, 1 frūt; 2 fruṭ. I[d]. vt. & vi. To produce as fruit; bear fruit. II. n. 1. The matured seed-vessel of a flowering plant, with its contents and immediate accessories, especially when edible; any vegetable product used as food; spores and spore-cases. 2. That which is produced; offspring; product; result; effect. [F., < L. fructus, < fructus or fruitus, pp. of fruor, enjoy.]

Syn.: vegetable. In botany, a fruit of a flowering plant is the matured seed-vessel and its contents, together with such accessory parts as become finally incorporated with them. Thus, in the botanical sense, not only apples, pears, peaches, tomatoes, figs, etc., but all berries, nuts, grains, beans, peas, pumpkins, squashes, cucumbers, and melons, as well as pine-cones, the samaras or winged seeds of the maple, ash, or elm, and many other products, are fruits. Popular usage has, however, become much narrower. The grains have been dropped, and the tendency is to drop nuts also, so that a fruit is now generally understood to be the fleshy and juicy product of some plant, usually tree or shrub (and nearly always containing the seed), which, when ripe, is edible without cooking, and adapted for use as a dessert rather than as a salad. The quince, however, tho usually cooked before eating, is classed among fruits, and we sometimes speak of poisonous fruits, as the berries of the nightshade. A vegetable, in the popular sense, is any part of a herbaceous plant commonly used for culinary purposes, and may consist of the root, as in the beet and turnip; the stem, as in the asparagus, celery, and rhubarb (or pie-plant); a tuber, or underground stem, as in the potato; the foliage, as in cabbage and spinach, or of that which is botanically the fruit, as in the tomato, bean, pea, and eggplant. Thus the tomato is botanically a fruit, tho for table use and in the garden and market it ranks as a vegetable. "The fruits of certain low-growing perennial plants are specifically termed by horticulturists 'small fruits,' including the strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry, currant, huckleberry, and cranberry. The term includes grapes, but excludes cherries." CROZIER Dict. of Bot. Terms.

Syn.: common, commonplace, customary, everyday, familiar, frequent, habitual, normal, ordinary, popular, prevalent, public, universal, usual. Common signifies frequently occurring, not out of the regular course, not exceptional; hence, not above the average, not excellent or distinguished, inferior, or even low; common also signifies pertaining to or participated in by two or more persons or things; as, sorrow is common to the race. General may signify pertaining equally to all of a class, race, etc., but often signifies pertaining to the greater number, but not necessarily to all. Universal applies to all without exception; general applies to all with possible or comparatively slight exceptions; common applies to very many without deciding whether they are all, or even a majority. A common remark is one we often hear; a general experience is one that comes to the majority of people; a universal experience is one from which no human being is exempt. It is dangerous for a debater to affirm a universal proposition, since that can be negatived by a single exception, while a general statement is not invalidated even by adducing many exceptions. We say a common opinion, common experience, a general rule, general truth, a universal law. Compare COMMON; FREQUENT; HABITUAL; NORMAL; USUAL.—Ant.: exceptional, infrequent, odd, peculiar, queer, rare, singular, strange, uncommon, unfamiliar, unknown, unparalleled, unprecedented, unusual.

gen'er-ous, 1 jen'ər-us; 2 ġĕn'er-ŭs, a. 1. Giving or bestowing heartily and liberally; chivalrous. 2. Cheering or stimulating, as wine. 3. Of good descent: said of men or animals. [OF., < L. generosus, of noble birth.]

Syn.: bountiful, chivalrous, disinterested, free, free-handed, free-hearted, liberal, magnanimous, munificent, noble, open-handed, open-hearted. Generous (L. genus, a race) primarily signifies having the qualities worthy of noble or honorable birth; hence, free and abundant in giving, giving freely, heartily, and self-sacrificingly. As regards giving, generous refers rather to the self-sacrificing heartiness of the giver, liberal to the amount of the gift; a child may show himself generous in the gift of an apple, a millionaire makes a liberal donation; a generous gift, however, is commonly thought of as both ample and hearty. A munificent gift is vast in amount, whatever the motive of its bestowal. One may be free with another's money; he can be generous only with his own. Disinterested suggests rather the thought of one's own self-denial. One is magnanimous by a greatness of soul (L. maynus, great, and animus, soul) that rises above all that is poor, mean, or weak, and thus above resentment of injury or insult.—Ant.: avaricious, close, covetous, greedy, ignoble, illiberal, mean, miserly, niggardly, parsimonious, penurious, petty, rapacious, stingy.

[< AS. gifan.]

Syn.: bestow, cede, communicate, confer, deliver, furnish, grant impart, supply. To give is primarily to transfer to another's possession or ownership without compensation; in its secondary sense in popular use, it is to put into another's possession by any means and on any terms whatever; a buyer may say "Give me the goods, and I will give you the money"; we speak of giving answers, information, etc., and often of giving what is not agreeable to the recipient, as blows, medicine, reproof; but when there is nothing in the context to indicate the contrary, give is always understood in its primary sense; as, this book was given me. Give thus becomes, like get, a term of such general import as to be a synonym for a wide variety of words. To grant is to put into one's possession in some formal way, or by authoritative act; as, Congress grants lands to a railroad corporation. Confer has a similar sense; as, to confer a degree or an honor; we grant a request or petition, but do not confer it. To impart is to give of that which one still, to a greater or less degree, retains; the teacher imparts instruction. To bestow is to give that of which the receiver stands in especial need; we bestow alms. See ALLOT; CONVEY; SURRENDER.—Ant.: accept, assume, capture, choose, obtain, procure, receive, take.

Syn.: beautiful. That which is graceful is marked by elegance and harmony, with ease of action, attitude, or posture, or delicacy of form. Graceful commonly suggests motion or the possibility of motion; beautiful may apply to absolute fixity; a landscape or a blue sky is beautiful, but neither is graceful. Graceful commonly applies to beauty as addressed to the eye, tho we often speak of a graceful poem or a graceful compliment. Graceful applies to the perfection of motion, especially of the lighter motions, which convey no suggestion of stress or strain, and are in harmonious curves. Apart from the thought of motion, graceful denotes a pleasing harmony of outline, proportion, etc., with a certain degree of delicacy; a Hercules is massive, an Apollo is graceful. We speak of a graceful attitude, graceful drapery. Compare BEAUTIFUL; BECOMING.—Ant.: see synonyms for AWKWARD.

Syn.: custom, fashion, habitude, practise, routine, rule, system, usage, use, wont. Habit is a tendency or inclination toward an action or condition, which by repetition has become easy, spontaneous, or even unconscious, or an action or regular series of actions, or a condition so induced. Habitude is habitual relation or association. Custom is the uniform doing of the same act in the same circumstance, usually, at least in the origin of the custom, for a definite reason; routine is the doing of customary acts in a regular and uniform sequence and is more mechanical than custom. It is the custom of tradesmen to open at a uniform hour, and to follow a regular routine of business until closing-time. Custom is chiefly used of the action of many; habit of the action of one; we speak of the customs of society, the habits of an individual. Fashion is the generally recognized custom in the smaller matters, especially in dress. A rule is prescribed either by some external authority or by one's own will; as, it is the rule of the house; or, I make it my invariable rule. System is the coordination of many acts or things into a unity, and is higher and better than routine. Practise is the active doing of something in a systematic way; we do not speak of the practise, but of the habit of going to sleep. Wont is blind and instinctive habit like that which attaches an animal to a locality; the word is now almost wholly poetic. Syn.: blessedness, bliss, cheer, comfort, contentment, delight, ecstasy, enjoyment, felicity, gaiety, gladness, gratification, joy, merriment, mirth, pleasure, rapture, rejoicing, satisfaction, triumph. Comfort may be almost wholly negative, being found in security or relief from that which pains or annoys. Enjoyment is more positive and pleasure still more vivid; satisfaction is more tranquil than pleasure; when a worthy pleasure is past, a worthy satisfaction remains. Happiness is more complete than comfort, enjoyment, or satisfaction, more serene and rational than pleasure. Felicity is a colder and more formal term than happiness. Gladness is happiness that overflows. Joy is more intense than happiness, deeper than gladness, to which it is akin, nobler and more enduring than pleasure. Bliss is ecstatic, perfected happiness; as, the bliss of heaven. See COMFORT; RAPTURE.

hap'py, 1 hap'ı; 2 hăp'y, a. [HAP'PI-ER; HAP'PI-EST.] 1. Enjoying, giving, or indicating pleasure; joyous; blessed. 2. Dexterously or fortunately effective; opportune; felicitous; fortunate.

Syn.: blessed, blissful, blithe, blithesome, bright, buoyant, cheerful, cheering, cheery, delighted, delightful, dexterous, felicitous, fortunate, gay, glad, jocund, jolly, joyful, joyous, lucky, merry, mirthful, pleased, prosperous, rapturous, rejoiced, rejoicing, smiling, sprightly, successful, sunny. Happy primarily refers to something that comes "by good hap," a chance that brings prosperity, benefit, or success.

And grasps the skirts of happy chance.
TENNYSON In Memoriam lxiii, st. 2.

In this sense happy is closely allied to fortunate and lucky. (See FORTUNATE.) It was then used of the enjoyment of any good or advantage, becoming at times equivalent to blessed. Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth. Job v, 17. In its most frequent present use, happy is applied to the state of one enjoying happiness, or to that by which happiness is expressed; as, a happy heart; a happy face; happy laughter; happy tears. (Compare synonyms for HAPPINESS.) Cheerful applies to the possession or expression of a moderate and tranquil happiness. A cheery word spontaneously gives cheer to others; a cheering word is more distinctly planned to cheer and encourage. Gay applies to an effusive and superficial happiness (often not really worthy of that name) perhaps resulting largely from abundant animal spirits; we speak of gay revelers or a gay horse. A buoyant spirit is, as it were, borne up by joy and hope. A sunny disposition has a constant tranquil brightness that irradiates all who come within its influence. See AUSPICIOUS; CHEERFUL; CLEVER; FORTUNATE; SKILFUL; WELL. — Ant.: afflicted, distressed, gloomy, melancholy, miserable, mournful, pensive, regretful, sad, sorrowful, troubled, wobegone, woful.

har'vest, 1 hȧr'vest; 2 hȧr'vĕst. I[d]. vt. 1. To gather and store, as a crop; reap. 2. To receive as the result of any exertion. II. n. 1. A crop, as of grain, gathered or ready for gathering; also, the time of gathering. 2. The product of any toil or effort. [< AS. hærfest, autumn.] Syn.: crop, fruit, growth, harvest-feast, harvest-festival, harvest-home, harvesting, harvest-tide, harvest-time, increase, ingathering, proceeds, produce, product, reaping, result, return, yield. Harvest is the elegant and literary word; crop is the common and commercial expression; we say a man sells his crop, but we should not speak of his selling his harvest; we speak of an ample or abundant harvest, a good crop. Harvest is applied almost wholly to grain; crop applies to almost anything that is gathered in; we speak of the potato-crop, not the potato-harvest; we may say either the wheat-crop or the wheat-harvest. We speak of produce collectively, but of a product or various products; vegetables, fruits, eggs, butter, etc., may be termed farm-produce, or the products of the farm. Product is a word of wider application than produce; we speak of the products of manufacturing, the product obtained by multiplying one number by another, etc. The word proceeds is chiefly used of the return from an investment; we speak of the produce of a farm, but of the proceeds of the money invested in farming. The yield is what the land gives up to the farmer's demand, as the yield of corn or oats. Harvest has also a figurative use; as, the result of lax enforcement of law is a harvest of crime. Harvest, harvest-tide, and harvest-time alike denote the period or season when the crops are or should be gathered (tide being simply the old Saxon word for time). Harvest-home ordinarily denotes the festival of harvest, and when used to denote simply the season always gives a suggestion of festivity and rejoicing, such as harvest and harvest-time by themselves do not express. See INCREASE; PRODUCT.

[< AS. habban, have.]

Syn.: be in possession of, be possessed of, hold, occupy, own, possess. Have is the most general word, and is applied to whatever belongs to or is connected with one; a man may be said to have what is his own, what he has borrowed, what has been entrusted to him, or what he has stolen. To possess a thing is to have the ownership with control and enjoyment of it. To hold is to have in one's hand, or securely in one's control; a man holds his friend's coat for a moment, or he holds a struggling horse; he holds a promissory note, or holds an office. To own is to have the right of property in; to possess is to have that right in actual exercise; to occupy is to have possession and use with or without ownership. A man occupies his own house or a room in a hotel; he may own a farm of which he is not in possession because a tenant occupies it and is determined to hold it. To be in possession differs from possess in that to possess denotes both right and fact, while to be in possession denotes simply the fact with no affirmation as to the right. To have reason is to be endowed with the faculty; to be in possession of one's reason denotes that the faculty is in actual present exercise.

her'e-tic, 1 her'ı-tik; 2 hĕr'e-tĭc, n. One who holds a heresy.

Syn.: dissenter, heresiarch, nonconformist, schismatic. Etymologically, a heretic is one who takes or chooses his own belief, instead of the belief of his church; a schismatic is primarily one who produces a split or rent in the church. A heretic differs in doctrine from the religious body with which he is connected; a schismatic differs in doctrine or practise, or in both. A heretic may be reticent, or even silent; a schismatic introduces divisions. A heresiarch is the author of a heresy or the leader of a heretical party, and is thus at once a heretic and a schismatic. With advancing ideas of religious liberty, the odious sense once attached to these words is largely modified, and heretic is often used playfully. Dissenter and nonconformist are terms specifically applied to English subjects who hold themselves aloof from the Church of England.—he-ret'i-cal, a. At variance with or subversive of accepted views or beliefs. -ly, adv.

Syn.: bury, cloak, conceal, cover, disguise, dissemble, entomb, inter, mask, overwhelm, screen, secrete, suppress, veil. Hide is the general term, including all the rest, signifying to put out of sight or beyond ready observation or approach; a thing may be hidden by intention, by accident, or by the imperfection of the faculties of the one from whom it is hidden; in their games, children hide the slipper, or hide themselves from each other; a man unconsciously hides a picture from another by standing before it, or hides a thing from himself by laying something else over it. So a cloud may hide the sun, or a building may hide some part of the prospect. As an act of persons, to conceal is always intentional; one may hide his face in anger, grief, or abstraction; he conceals his face when he fears recognition. A house is hidden by foliage; the bird's nest is artfully concealed. A thing is covered by putting something over or around it, whether by accident or design; it is screened by putting something before it, always with some purpose of protection from observation, inconvenience, attack, censure, etc. In the figurative use, a person may hide honorable feelings; he conceals an evil or hostile intent. Compare BURY; MASK; PALLIATE.—Ant.: admit, advertise, avow, betray, confess, disclose, discover, disinter, divulge, exhibit, exhume, expose, lay bare, lay open, make known, manifest, promulgate, publish, raise, reveal, show, tell, uncover, unmask, unveil.

[< AS. hēah, high.]

Syn.: elevated, eminent, exalted, lofty, noble, proud, steep, tall, towering, uplifted. Deep, while an antonym of high in usage, may apply to the very same distance simply measured in an opposite direction, high applying to vertical distance measured from below upward, and deep to vertical distance measured from above downward; as, a deep valley nestling between high mountains. High is a relative term signifying greatly raised above any object, base, or surface, in comparison with what is usual, or with some standard; a table is high if it exceeds thirty inches; a hill is not high at a hundred feet. That is tall whose height is greatly in excess of its breadth or diameter, and whose actual height is great for an object of its kind; as, a tall tree; a tall man; tall grass. That is lofty which is imposing or majestic in height; we term a spire tall with reference to its altitude, or lofty with reference to its majestic appearance. That is elevated which is raised somewhat above its surroundings; that is eminent which is far above them; as, an elevated platform; an eminent promontory. In the figurative sense, elevated is less than eminent, and this less than exalted; we speak of high, lofty, or elevated thoughts, aims, etc., in the good sense, but sometimes of high feelings, looks, words, etc., in the invidious sense of haughty or arrogant. A high ambition may be merely selfish; a lofty ambition is worthy and noble. Compare HAUGHTY; STEEP.—Ant.: base, deep, degraded, depressed, dwarfed, inferior, low, mean, short, stunted.

Syn.: account, annals, archives, autobiography, biography, chronicle, memoir, memorial, muniment, narration, narrative, recital, record, register, story. History is a systematic record of past events. Annals and chronicles relate events with little regard to their relative importance, and with complete subserviency to their succession in time. Annals (L. annus, year) are yearly records; chronicles (Gr. chronos, time) follow the order of time. Both necessarily lack emphasis, selection, and perspective. Archives are public records, which may be annals, or chronicles, or deeds of property, etc. Memoirs generally record the lives of individuals or facts pertaining to individual lives. A biography is distinctively a written account of one person's life and actions; an autobiography is a biography written by the person whose life it records. Annals, archives, chronicles, biographies, and memoirs and other records furnish the materials of history. History recounts events with careful attention to their importance, their mutual relations, their causes and consequences, selecting and grouping events on the ground of interest or importance. History is usually applied to such an account of events affecting communities and nations, tho sometimes we speak of the history of a single eminent life. Compare RECORD.—Ant.: see synonyms for FICTION.

hole, 1 hōl; 2 hōl, n. 1. A cavity extending into any solid body; a pit; hollow; cave. 2. An aperture or orifice; perforation. 3. An animal's burrow or den. 4. Hence, a vile place; also, a place of hiding. 5. [Colloq.] A dilemma. [< AS. hol, < helan, hide.]

Syn.: aperture, bore, breach, cave, cavern, cavity, chasm, concavity, den, dent, dungeon, excavation, gap, hollow, indentation, kennel, lair, notch, opening, orifice, perforation, rent. A hole is an opening in a solid body; it may extend entirely through the body, forming a passageway, or only partly through it, forming a cavity, and may be of any shape, provided the axes are not greatly unequal. An opening very long in proportion to its width is more commonly called a crack, fissure, slit, etc., or on the surface of the earth such an opening is designated as a chasm, gorge, or ravine; a rent in a garment is made by tearing, a slit by cutting. An orifice is the mouth of a hole or tube. Aperture is a very general word; the crack of a partly opened door is an aperture, but not a hole. The noun hollow denotes a shallow concavity on the outer surface of a solid, usually round or oval. A dent is a depression on the surface of a solid usually sharp or angular, as if beaten in. A breach is roughly broken, generally from the top or edge down through a wall or other object; a gap may be between portions that never were joined. Compare BREACH; BREAK; REND.

ho'ly, 1 hō'lı; 2 hō'ly, a. [HO'LI-ER; HO'LI-EST.] 1. Pertaining to holiness; morally excellent; of highest spiritual purity. 2. Consecrated; hallowed. [< AS. hālig, < hāl, whole.] Syn.: blessed, consecrated, devoted, divine, hallowed, sacred, saintly, set apart. Sacred is applied to that which is to be regarded as inviolable on any account, and is not restricted to divine things; so in its lower applications it is less than holy. That which is sacred may be made so by institution, decree, or association; that which is holy is so by its own nature, possessing intrinsic moral purity, and, in the highest sense, absolute moral perfection. God is holy; his commands are sacred. Holy may be applied also to that which is hallowed; as, "the place whereon thou standest is holy ground," Ex. iii, 5. In such use holy is more than sacred, as if the very qualities of a spiritual or divine presence were imparted to the place or object. Divine has been used with great looseness, as applying to anything eminent or admirable, in the line either of goodness or of mere power, as to eloquence, music, etc., but there is a commendable tendency to restrict the word to its higher sense, as designating that which belongs to or is worthy of the Divine Being. Compare PERFECT; PURE.—Ant.: abominable, common, cursed, impure, polluted, secular, unconsecrated, unhallowed, unholy, unsanctified, wicked, worldly.

home, 1 hōm; 2 hōm. I. vt. & vi. [HOMED; HOM'ING.] To carry, bring, or send home; go or fly home, as a homing pigeon; occupy a home; dwell. II. a. 1. Pertaining to one's home or country. 2. Going to the point; effective; as, a home thrust. III. n. 1. One's fixed place of abode; family residence. 2. A congenial abiding-place. 3. The locality or country in which a person, plant, or animal comes into being or dwells; habitat. 4. Any place of rest or shelter. 5. In games, a goal. IV. adv. 1. To or at home. 2. To the place or point intended; as, to thrust or strike home. [< AS. hām, home.]

Syn.: abode, domicil, dwelling, fireside, habitation, hearth, hearthstone, house, ingleside, residence. Abode, dwelling, and habitation are used with little difference of meaning to denote the place where one habitually lives; abode and habitation belong to the poetic or elevated style. Even dwelling is not used in familiar speech; a person says "my house," "my home," or more formally "my residence." Home, from the Anglo-Saxon, denoting originally a dwelling, came to mean an endeared dwelling as the scene of domestic love and happy and cherished family life, a sense to which there is an increasing tendency to restrict the word—desirably so, since we have other words to denote the mere dwelling-place; we say "The wretched tenement could not be called home," or "The humble cabin was dear to him as the home of his childhood."

> Home's not merely four square walls,
> Tho with pictures hung and gilded;
> Home is where affection calls—
> Where its shrine the heart has builded.

Thus the word comes to signify any place of rest and peace, and especially heaven, as the soul's peaceful and eternal dwelling-place. See HOUSE.

[< L. honestus, full of honor, < honor, honor.]

Syn.: candid, equitable, fair, faithful, frank, genuine, good, honorable, ingenuous, just, sincere, straightforward, true, trustworthy, trusty, upright. One who is honest in the ordinary sense acts or is always disposed to act with careful regard for the rights of others, especially in matters of business or property; one who is honorable scrupulously observes the dictates of a personal honor that is higher than any demands of mercantile law or public opinion, and will do nothing unworthy of his own inherent nobility of soul. The honest man does not steal, cheat, or defraud; the honorable man will not take an unfair advantage that would be allowed him, or will make a sacrifice which no one could require of him, when his own sense of right demands it. One who is honest in the highest and fullest sense is scrupulously careful to adhere to all known truth and right even in thought. In this sense honest differs from honorable as having regard rather to absolute truth and right than to even the highest personal honor. Compare CANDID; JUST; JUSTICE; MORAL; RIGHT; VIRTUOUS.—Ant.: deceitful, dishonest, disingenuous, faithless, false, fraudulent, hypocritical, lying, mendacious, perfidious, traitorous, treacherous, unfaithful, unscrupulous, untrue.

Syn.: even, flat, level, plain, plane. Horizontal signifies in the direction of or parallel to the horizon. For practical purposes level and horizontal are identical, tho level, as the more popular word, is more loosely used of that which has no especially noticeable elevations or inequalities; as, a level road. Flat, according to its derivation from the Anglo-Saxon flet, a floor, applies to a surface only, and, in the first and most usual sense, to a surface that is horizontal or level in all directions; a line may be level, a floor is flat; flat is also applied in a derived sense to any plane surface without irregularities or elevations, as a picture may be painted on the flat surface of a perpendicular wall. Plane applies only to a surface, and is used with more mathematical exactness than flat. The adjective plain, originally the same word as plane, is now rarely used except in the figurative senses; as, a plain statement; plain people; but the original sense appears in the noun, as we speak of "a wide plain." We speak of a horizontal line, a flat morass, a level road, a plain country, a plane surface (especially in the scientific sense). That which is level may not be even, and that which is even may not be level; a level road may be very rough; a slope may be even. See FLAT; LEVEL.—Ant.: broken, hilly, inclined, irregular, rolling, rough, rugged, slanting, sloping, uneven.

hy-poc'ri-sy, 1 hi-pok'rĭ-sĭ; 2 hy-pŏc'rĭ-sy, n. [-SIES[z], pl.] The feigning to be what one is not; extreme insincerity; dissimulation.

Syn.: affectation, cant, dissimulation, formalism, pharisaism, pietism, pretense, sanctimoniousness, sanctimony, sham. Pretense (L. prætendo) primarily signifies the holding something forward as having certain rights or claims, whether truly or falsely; in the good sense, it is now rarely used except with a negative; as, there can be no pretense that this is due; a false pretense implies the possibility of a true pretense; but, alone and unlimited, pretense commonly signifies the offering of something for what it is not. Hypocrisy is the false pretense of moral excellence, either as a cover for actual wrong, or for the sake of the credit and advantage attaching to virtue. Cant (L. canius, a song), primarily the singsong iteration of the language of any party, school, or sect, denotes the mechanical and pretentious use of religious phraseology, without corresponding feeling or character; sanctimoniousness is the assumption of a saintly manner without a saintly character. Affectation is in matters of intellect, taste, etc., much what hypocrisy is in morals and religion; affectation might be termed petty hypocrisy. Compare DECEPTION. —Ant.: candor, frankness, genuineness, honesty, ingenuousness, openness, sincerity, transparency, truth, truthfulness.

hyp'o-crite, 1 hip'o-krĭt; 2 hȳp'o-crit, n. One who acts hyp'o-crit[s], a false part or makes false professions. [F., < Gr. hypokritēs, one who plays a part on the stage.]

Syn.: cheat, deceiver, dissembler, impostor, pretender. A hypocrite is one who acts a false part, or assumes a character other than the real. The deceiver seeks to give false impressions of any matter where he has an end to gain; the dissembler or hypocrite seeks to give false impressions in regard to himself. The dissembler is content if he can keep some base conduct or evil purpose from being discovered; the hypocrite seeks not merely to cover his vices, but to gain credit for virtue. The cheat and impostor endeavor to make something out of those whom they may deceive. The cheat is the inferior and more mercenary, as the thimble-rig gambler; the impostor may aspire to a fortune or a throne. Compare HYPOCRISY.

—hyp"o-crit'i-cal, a. Pertaining to a hypocrite or hypocrisy.—hyp"o-crit'i-cal-ly, adv.

(2) The separate personal subsistence of each of the three persons of the Trinity in one divine substance. 4. Pathol. (1) A settling down of a fluid of the body, as the blood. (2) A morbid deposition of sedimentary matter within the body. [+ Gr. histēmi, stand.] —hy"po-stat'ic, a. 1. Theol. Distinctly personal. 2. Relating to or proceeding from hypostasis; elemental. 3. Pathol. Resulting from downward pressure.—hy"po-stat'i-cal-ly, adv. — hy"po-sul'fite, n. A crystalline salt used as a fixing agent in photography.—hy-pot'e-nuse, n. The side of a right-angled triangle opposite the right angle. [+ Gr. teinō, stretch.] hypoth'e-nuse†.

hypoth., abbr. Hypothesis, hypothetical.

hy-poth'e-sis, 1 haĭ-poth'ĭ-sis; 2 hȳ-pŏth'e-sĭs, n. [-SES[z], pl.] A state of things assumed as a basis of reasoning, experiment, or investigation; loosely and generally, an unsupported or ill-supported theory; a guess or conjecture.

Syn.: conjecture, guess, scheme, speculation, supposition, surmise, system, theory. A hypothesis is a statement of what is deemed possibly true, assumed and reasoned upon as if certainly true, with a view of reaching truth not yet surely known; especially, in the sciences, a hypothesis is a comprehensive tentative explanation of certain phenomena, which is meant to include all other facts of the same class, and which is assumed as true till there has been opportunity to bring all related facts into comparison; if the hypothesis explains all the facts, it is regarded as verified; till then it is regarded as a working hypothesis, that is, one that may answer for present practical purposes. A hypothesis may be termed a comprehensive guess. Compare GUESS; SYSTEM; THEORY.—Ant.: certainty, demonstration, discovery, evidence, fact, proof.

—hy″po-thet′ic, -i-cal, a. Having the nature of or based on hypothesis; conjectural. Syn.: see IMAGINARY. —hy″po-thet′i-cal-ly, adv.

i-de'a, 1 aĭ-dĭ'ə; 2 ī-dē'a, n. 1. Any product of mental apprehension or activity. 2. A conception; notion. 3. A purpose or plan. 4. A mental image. 5. A standard of excellence; ideal. [L., < Gr. idea, form, < idein, see.]

Syn.: apprehension, archetype, belief, conceit, concept, conception, design, fancy, fantasy, ideal, image, imagination, impression, judgment, model, notion, opinion, pattern, plan, purpose, sentiment, supposition, theory, thought. Idea is in Greek a form or an image. The word signified in early philosophical use the archetype or primal image which the Platonic philosophy supposed to be the model or pattern that existing objects imperfectly embody. This high sense has nearly disappeared from the word idea, and has been largely appropriated by ideal, tho something of the original meaning still appears when in theological or philosophical language we speak of the ideas of God. The present popular use of idea makes it signify any product of mental apprehension or activity, considered as an object of knowledge or thought; this coincides with the primitive sense at but a single point—that an idea is mental as opposed to anything substantial or physical; thus, almost any mental product, as a belief, conception, design, opinion, etc., may now be called an idea. Compare FANCY; IDEAL; IMAGE; THOUGHT.—Ant.: actuality, fact, reality, substance.

i-de'al, 1 aĭ-dĭ'əl; 2 ī-dē'al, a. 1. Pertaining to or existing in ideas; conceptional. 2. Existing only in imagination or notion. 3. Conceived as perfect, supremely excellent, or very desirable.

Syn.: fancied, fanciful, imaginary, unreal, visionary. Compare IMAGINARY; ROMANTIC. See also PERFECT. Compare synonyms for IDEAL, n.—Ant.: actual, material, palpable, physical, real, substantial, tangible, visible.

i-de'al, n. 1. That which is taken as a standard of excellence or an ultimate object of attainment; model; type. 2. That which exists only in imagination.

Syn.: archetype, idea, model, original, pattern, prototype, standard. An ideal is that which is conceived or taken as the highest type of excellence or ultimate object of attainment. The archetype is the primal form, actual or imaginary, according to which any existing thing is constructed; the prototype has or has had actual existence; in the derived sense, as in metrology, a prototype may not be the original form, but one having equal authority with that as a standard. An ideal may be primal, or may be slowly developed even from failures and by negations; an ideal is meant to be perfect, the best conceivable thing that could by possibility be attained. The artist's ideal is his own mental image, of which his finished work is but an imperfect expression. The original is the first specimen, good or bad; the original of a master is superior to all copies. The standard may be below the ideal. The ideal is imaginary, and ordinarily unattainable; the standard is concrete, and ordinarily attainable, being a measure to which all else of its kind must conform; as, the standard of weights and measures, of corn, or of cotton. The idea of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in general; the ideal of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in its highest conceivable perfection. Compare EXAMPLE; IDEA.—Ant.: accomplishment, achievement, act, action, attainment, development, doing, embodiment, execution, fact, incarnation, performance, practise, reality, realization.

—i-de'al-ism, n. 1. Philos. The doctrine that ideas are the only objects immediately known. 2. The quest of ideal perfection. 3. Art. The endeavor to attain perfection by uniting in one form all the finest qualities to be found in individual forms.—i-de'al-ist, n.—i-de"al-is'tic, a.—i"de-al'i-ty, n. [-TIES[Z], pl.] 1. The condition or character of being ideal. i-de'al-ness‡. 2. The power or tendency to form ideals.—i-de"al-i-za'[or -sa']tion, n.—i-de'al-ize, i-de'al-ise, vt. & vi. [-IZED, -ISED; -IZ"ING, -IS"ING.] To render ideal; beautify; form ideals.—i-de'al-iz"er, -is"er, n.—i-de'al-ly, adv.

I'dem, 1 aĭ'dem; 2 ī'dĕm, n. The same: abbreviated id. [L.]

i-den'ti-cal, 1 aĭ-den'tĭ-kl; 2 ī-dĕn'ti-el, a. 1. Absolutely the same. 2. Uniform. [< LL. identicus, < L. idem, the same.]

Syn.: alike, equivalent, interchangeable, same, selfsame, very same. Strictly, no two persons or things can be identical or the same. In looser usage, two volumes may be said to be identical or the same in contents; a carbon copy is identical in substance with the original, but is not the same document. Two synonyms, as "begin" and "commence," may be in most cases equivalent and interchangeable, but one is not the same as the other, and at some point they will be found to draw apart, either in meaning or use. A check may be equivalent to the money specified, but it is not the same as cash; hence, the bribe-giver prefers to pay cash, because it cannot be traced like a check. When a person or thing is surely recognized as the very one referred to, and no other, we say, "This is the identical man, the identical document," or "the same man, document," or the like. This is the thought underlying the use of the noun in the phrase "personal identity." Same is the popular, identical the philosophical word, and so more specific and absolute. See SYNONYMOUS.—Ant.: contrary, different, dissimilar, distinct, diverse, other, separate, unlike.

i-den'ti-fy, 1 aĭ-den'tĭ-faĭ; 2 ī-dĕn'ti-fy, vt. [-FIED; -FY"ING.] 1. To assert or prove to be absolutely the same. 2. To join with; unite. 3. To ascertain or determine the personality, character, or relations of. 4. To serve as a mark for recognition.—i-den"ti-fi-ca'tion, n.

[+ Gr. graphō, write.] i'de-o-gram‡.—i"de-o-graph'ic, a.—i"de-o-graph'i-cal, a.—i"de-og'ra-phy, n.—i"de-ol'o-gy, n. The science that treats of the evolution of human ideas.—i"de-ol'o-gist, n. A theorist; idealist.—i'de-o-phone, n. A sound or a combination of sounds representing a thought; an uttered word.

ides, 1 aĭdz; 2 ĭdş, n. pl. Rom. Antiq. The 15th of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of the other months. [< L. idus, ides.]

id"i-oc'ra-sy, 1 ĭd"ĭ-ok'rə-sĭ; 2 ĭd"i-ŏc'ra-sy, n. [-SIES, 1 -SIZ; 2 -sĭş, pl.] Same as IDIOSYNCRASY. id"i-o-cra'sis‡.

id'i-o-cy, 1 ĭd'ĭ-o-sĭ; 2 ĭd'i-o-çy, n. The condition of being an idiot. id'i-ot-cy‡; id'i-ot-ry‡.

Syn.: fatuity, folly, foolishness, imbecility, incapacity, senselessness, stupidity. Idiocy is a state of mental unsoundness amounting almost or quite to total absence of understanding. Imbecility is a condition of mental weakness, which may or may not be as complete as that of idiocy, but is at least such as to incapacitate for the serious duties of life. Incapacity, or lack of legal qualification for certain acts, necessarily results from imbecility, but may also result from other causes, as from insanity or from age, sex, etc.; as, the incapacity of a minor to make a contract. Idiocy or imbecility is weakness of mind, while insanity is disorder or abnormal action of mind. Folly and foolishness denote a want of mental and often of moral balance. Fatuity is sometimes used as equivalent to idiocy, but more frequently signifies conceited and excessive folly. Stupidity is dulness and slowness of mental action which may range all the way from lack of normal readiness to absolute imbecility. Compare INSANITY.—Ant.: acuteness, astuteness, brilliancy, capacity, common sense, intelligence, sagacity, sense, soundness, wisdom.

id'i-om, 1 id'ı-əm; 2 ĭd'i-om, n. 1. A use of words peculiar to a particular language. 2. A peculiar speech or jargon. 3. The peculiar spirit of a language. id"i-o-syn'cra-sy, 1 id"ı-o-sin'krə-sı; 2 ĭd"i-o-sĭn'era-sy, n. [-SIES^{z}, pl.] A constitutional peculiarity, as of susceptibility or aversion; distinctive mental quality or characteristic. [< Gr. idios, personal, + syn, with, + krasis, mingling.]—id"i-o-syn-crat'ic, a.

id'i-ot, 1 id'ı-ət; 2 ĭd'i-ot, n. 1. A human being in whom reason has never been developed; an imbecile. 2. A foolish fellow. [< Gr. idiōtēs, a private, ignorant person.]—id"i-ot'ic, a. Like an idiot. id"i-ot'i-cal‡.—id"i-ot'i-cal-ly, adv.—id'i-ot-ism, n. 1. An individual peculiarity of expression. 2. An idiom. 3§. Idiocy.

i'dle, 1 aı'dl; 2 ī'dl. I. vt. & vi. [I'DLED; I'DLING.] To spend in idleness; lose time in inaction. II. a. 1. Not occupied; doing nothing. 2. Averse to labor; lazy. 3. Affording leisure. 4. Useless; vain. [< AS. īdel, empty.]

Syn.: inactive, indolent, inert, lazy, slothful, sluggish, trifling, unemployed, unoccupied, vacant. Idle etymologically denotes not the absence of action, but vain, useless action—the absence of useful, effective action; the idle schoolboy may be very actively whittling his desk or tormenting his neighbors. Doing nothing whatever is the secondary meaning of idle. A lazy person may chance to be employed in useful work, but he acts without energy or impetus. We speak figuratively of a lazy stream. Slothful belongs in the moral realm, denoting a self-indulgent aversion to exertion. Indolent is a milder term for the same quality. See INSIGNIFICANT; VAIN.—Ant.: active, busy, diligent, employed, industrious, occupied, working.

—i'dle-ness, n.—i'dler, n. 1. One who idles. 2. A gear-wheel transmitting motion between two other gears. i'dle-wheel‡.—i'dly, adv.

ig'no-rant, 1 ig'no-rənt; 2 ĭg'no-rant. I. a 1. Destitute of education or knowledge. 2. Unacquainted. 3. Manifesting ignorance. II§. n. An uneducated or unskilled person.

Syn.: ill-informed, illiterate, uneducated, unenlightened, uninformed, uninstructed, unlearned, unlettered, unskilled, untaught, untutored. Ignorant signifies destitute of education or knowledge, or lacking knowledge or information; it is thus a relative term. The most learned man is still ignorant of many things; persons are spoken of as ignorant who have not the knowledge that has become generally diffused in the world; the ignorant savage may be well instructed in matters of the field and the chase, and is thus more properly untutored than ignorant. Illiterate is without letters and the knowledge that comes through reading. Unlettered is similar in meaning to illiterate, but less absolute; the unlettered man may have acquired the art of reading and writing and some elementary knowledge; the uneducated man has never taken any systematic course of mental training. Ignorance is relative; illiteracy is absolute; we have statistics of illiteracy; no statistics of ignorance are possible. See BRUTISH.—Ant.: educated, instructed, learned, sage, skilled, trained, well-informed, wise.—ig'no-rant-ly, adv.

ig-nore', 1 ig-nōr'; 2 ĭg-nōr', vt. [IG-NORED'; IG-NOR'ING.] 1. To pass unnoticed or as unworthy of notice. 2§. To be ignorant of. 3. Law. To reject; throw out. [< L. ignoro, < in-, not, + gnarus, knowing.]

ill'ness, 1 il'nes; 2 ĭl'nĕs, n. 1. The state of being out of health. 2. An ailment; sickness. 3†. Badness; evil.

Syn.: ailment, complaint, disease, disorder, distemper, indisposition, infirmity, sickness. Sickness was generally used in English speech and literature, till the close of the eighteenth century at least, for every form of physical disorder, as in the English Bible, e. g., Matt. iv, 23; 2 Kings xiii, 14. There is now, in England, a tendency to restrict the words sick and sickness to nausea, and to hold ill and illness as the only proper words to use in a general sense. This distinction has received a limited acceptance in the United States. See DISEASE.—Ant.: health, soundness, strength, vigor.

im-ag''i-na'tion, 1 im-aj''i-nē'shŏn; 2 im-ăğ''i-nā'shon, n. 1. The picturing power or act of the mind; the constructive or creative faculty. 2. That which is imagined; a mental image; a fantasm; notion. 3. Planning, plotting, or scheming, as involving mental construction.

Syn.: fancy, fantasy. Fancy and imagination both belong to the productive or, more properly, the constructive faculty. Both recombine and modify mental images; the one great distinction between them is that fancy is superficial, while imagination is deep, essential, spiritual. Fancy flits about the surface and is airy and playful, sometimes petty and sometimes false; imagination goes to the heart of things, and is deep, earnest, serious, and seeks always and everywhere for essential truth. Fancy variegates and decorates; imagination transforms and exalts. Fantasy in ordinary usage simply denotes capricious or erratic fancy, as appears in the adjective fantastic. Compare FANCY; IDEA; THOUGHT.—im-ag'i-na-tiv(eˢ, a. 1. Creative or constructive. 2. Characterized by or proceeding from imagination. im-me'di-ate, 1 i-mī'dı-ıt; 2 i-mē'di-at, a. 1. Without delay; instant. 2. Separated by no appreciable space; close. 3. Acting without the intervention of anything; direct. 4. Pertaining to a direct perception; intuitive.

Syn.: close, contiguous, direct, instant, next, present, intimate. — Ant.: distant, far, future, remote.

—im-me'di-a-cy, n. The state or quality of being immediate; directness of relation; closeness. — im-me'di-ately, adv. 1. In an immediate manner. (1) Without lapse of time; instantly; at once. (2) Without the intervention of anything; directly. 2. As soon as: a conjunctival and elliptical use.

Syn.: at once, directly, forthwith, instanter, instantly, now, presently, right away, right off, straightway, this instant, without delay. The strong and general human tendency to procrastination is shown in the progressive weakening of the various words in this group. Immediately primarily signifies without the intervention of anything as a medium, hence without the intervention of any, even the briefest, interval or lapse of time. By and by, which was once a synonym, has become an antonym of immediately, meaning at some (perhaps remote) future time. Directly, which once meant with no intervening time, now means after some little while; presently no longer means in this very present, but before very long. Even immediately is sliding from its instantaneousness, so that we are fain to substitute at once, instantly, etc., when we would make promptness emphatic. Right away and right off are vigorous conversational expressions in the United States. — Ant.: after a while, by and by, hereafter, in the future, some time.

im-merse', 1 i-mūrs'; 2 i-mĕrs', vt. [IM-MERSED't; IM-MERS'ING.] 1. To dip entirely, as under water. 2. To involve deeply. 3. To baptize by immersion. [< L. in, in, + mergo, dip.]

Syn.: bury, dip, douse, duck, immerge, plunge, sink, submerge. Dip is Saxon, while immerse is Latin for the same initial act; dip is accordingly the more popular and commonplace, immerse the more elegant and dignified expression in many cases. To speak of baptism by immersion as dipping now seems rude, tho entirely proper and usual in early English. Baptists now universally use the word immerse. To dip and to immerse alike signify to bury or submerge some object in a liquid; but dip implies that the object dipped is at once removed from the liquid, while immerse is wholly silent as to the removal. Immerse also suggests more absolute completeness of the action; one may dip his sleeve or dip a sponge in a liquid, if he but touches the edge; if he immerses it, he completely sinks it under, and covers it with the liquid. Submerge implies that the object can not readily be removed, if at all; as, a submerged wreck. To plunge is to immerse suddenly and violently, for which douse and duck are colloquial terms. Dip is used, also, unlike the other words, to denote the putting of a hollow vessel into a liquid in order to remove a portion of it; in this sense we say dip up, dip out. im'mi-nent, 1 im'ı-nent; 2 im'i-nĕnt, a. Dangerous and close at hand; impending.

Syn.: impending, threatening. Imminent, from the Latin, with the sense of projecting over, signifies liable to happen at once, as some calamity, dangerous and close at hand. Impending, also from the Latin, with the sense of hanging over, is closely akin to imminent, but somewhat less emphatic. Imminent is more immediate, impending more remote, threatening more contingent. An impending evil is almost sure to happen at some uncertain time, near or remote; an imminent peril is one liable to befall very speedily; a threatening peril may be near or remote, but always with hope that it may be averted.—Ant.: chimerical, contingent, doubtful, improbable, problematical, unexpected, unlikely.

im-ped'i-ment, 1 im-ped'ı-ment or -mənt; 2 ĭm-pĕd'i-ment, n. That which hinders or impedes; an obstruction.

Syn.: bar, barrier, clog, difficulty, encumbrance, hindrance, obstacle, obstruction. Difficulty makes an undertaking otherwise than easy. That which rests upon one as a burden is an encumbrance. A hindrance (kindred with hind, behind) is anything that makes one come behind or short of his purpose. An impediment (literally, that which checks the foot) may be either what one finds in his way or what he carries with him; impedimenta was the Latin name for the baggage of a soldier or of an army. The tendency is to view an impediment as something constant or, at least for a time, continuous; as, an impediment in one's speech. A difficulty or a hindrance may be either within one or without; a speaker may find difficulty in expressing himself, or difficulty in holding the attention of restless children. An encumbrance is always what one carries with him; an obstacle or an obstruction is always without. To a marching soldier the steepness of a mountain path is a difficulty, loose stones are impediments, a fence is an obstruction, a cliff or a boulder across the way is an obstacle; a knapsack is an encumbrance. —Ant.: advantage, aid, assistance, benefit, help, relief, succor.

Syn.: impossible, impractical, intractable. That which is impossible can not be done at all; that which is impracticable is theoretically possible, but can not be done under existing conditions. Impractical, which strictly means unpractical, not practical, is coming into frequent popular use, as the equivalent of impracticable, but the difference should be maintained; an impractical man lacks practical judgment or efficiency; an impracticable man is difficult to deal with (compare OBSTINATE; PERVERSE); an impractical scheme lacks practical fitness, is theoretic or visionary; an impracticable scheme has some inherent difficulties that would ensure its failure in action.—Ant.: easy, feasible, possible, practicable.
